What Alsace and Lorraine Are Worth.

To Germany as a military power Alsace-Lorraine was worth a great deal. To Germany a real democracy with no ambitious project of conquest the question of riches does not make much difference. From those provinces Germany derived the greater part of the iron ore, coal and potash which kept her munition works going. Eighty per cent. of the ore used in German foundries came from Lorraine. From her own mines Germany gets but eight million tons of ore a year.

Alsace is rich in potash. The mines were discovered thirteen years ago and since that time Germany has been almost dependent on the potash salts of that region. In fact there are no other mines like them in the world.

With no particular need for ammunition Germany may not miss the mines of the freed provinces, but industrially they are worth a good deal, and the stuff which is at present used for killing men may be put to a more useful purpose.

France will find the iron and potash very useful and very little of it will be allowed to find its way into German territory for many years to come.

Still Some Knockers Around the City.

There was a visitor in the city yesterday who had been here for a few days. He had met a good many people and talked a good deal about the prospects of the town and the district generally. It was his first visit and he was open to impressions. On being seen just before leaving one of his first remarks was: "You seem to have a lot of knockers in town. I never knew such a place for running down everything from the climate to the prospects. I don't see anything wrong with the place, but if you would believe some of your citizens it is not a fit place to live and it never will amount to anything."

Unfortunately the lethal chamber is illegal except for cats and dogs and hanging has a degrading effect on the rest of the community. There seems no other fate suitable for people who make their living here and yet continually hold up the bad points of the place to public view and refuse to see the good points.

When the shipbuilding starts up within a few weeks and new people begin to come in, the knockers will find themselves in a hopeless minority, but just now they seem to have so much influence that they hold the place back. They ridicule everybody's efforts and refuse to believe that any good thing can come to the city. They refuse absolutely to see things as they are, but instead they see them through blue spectacles. They have cultivated the pessimistic habit until today it is almost impossible for them to think hopefully.

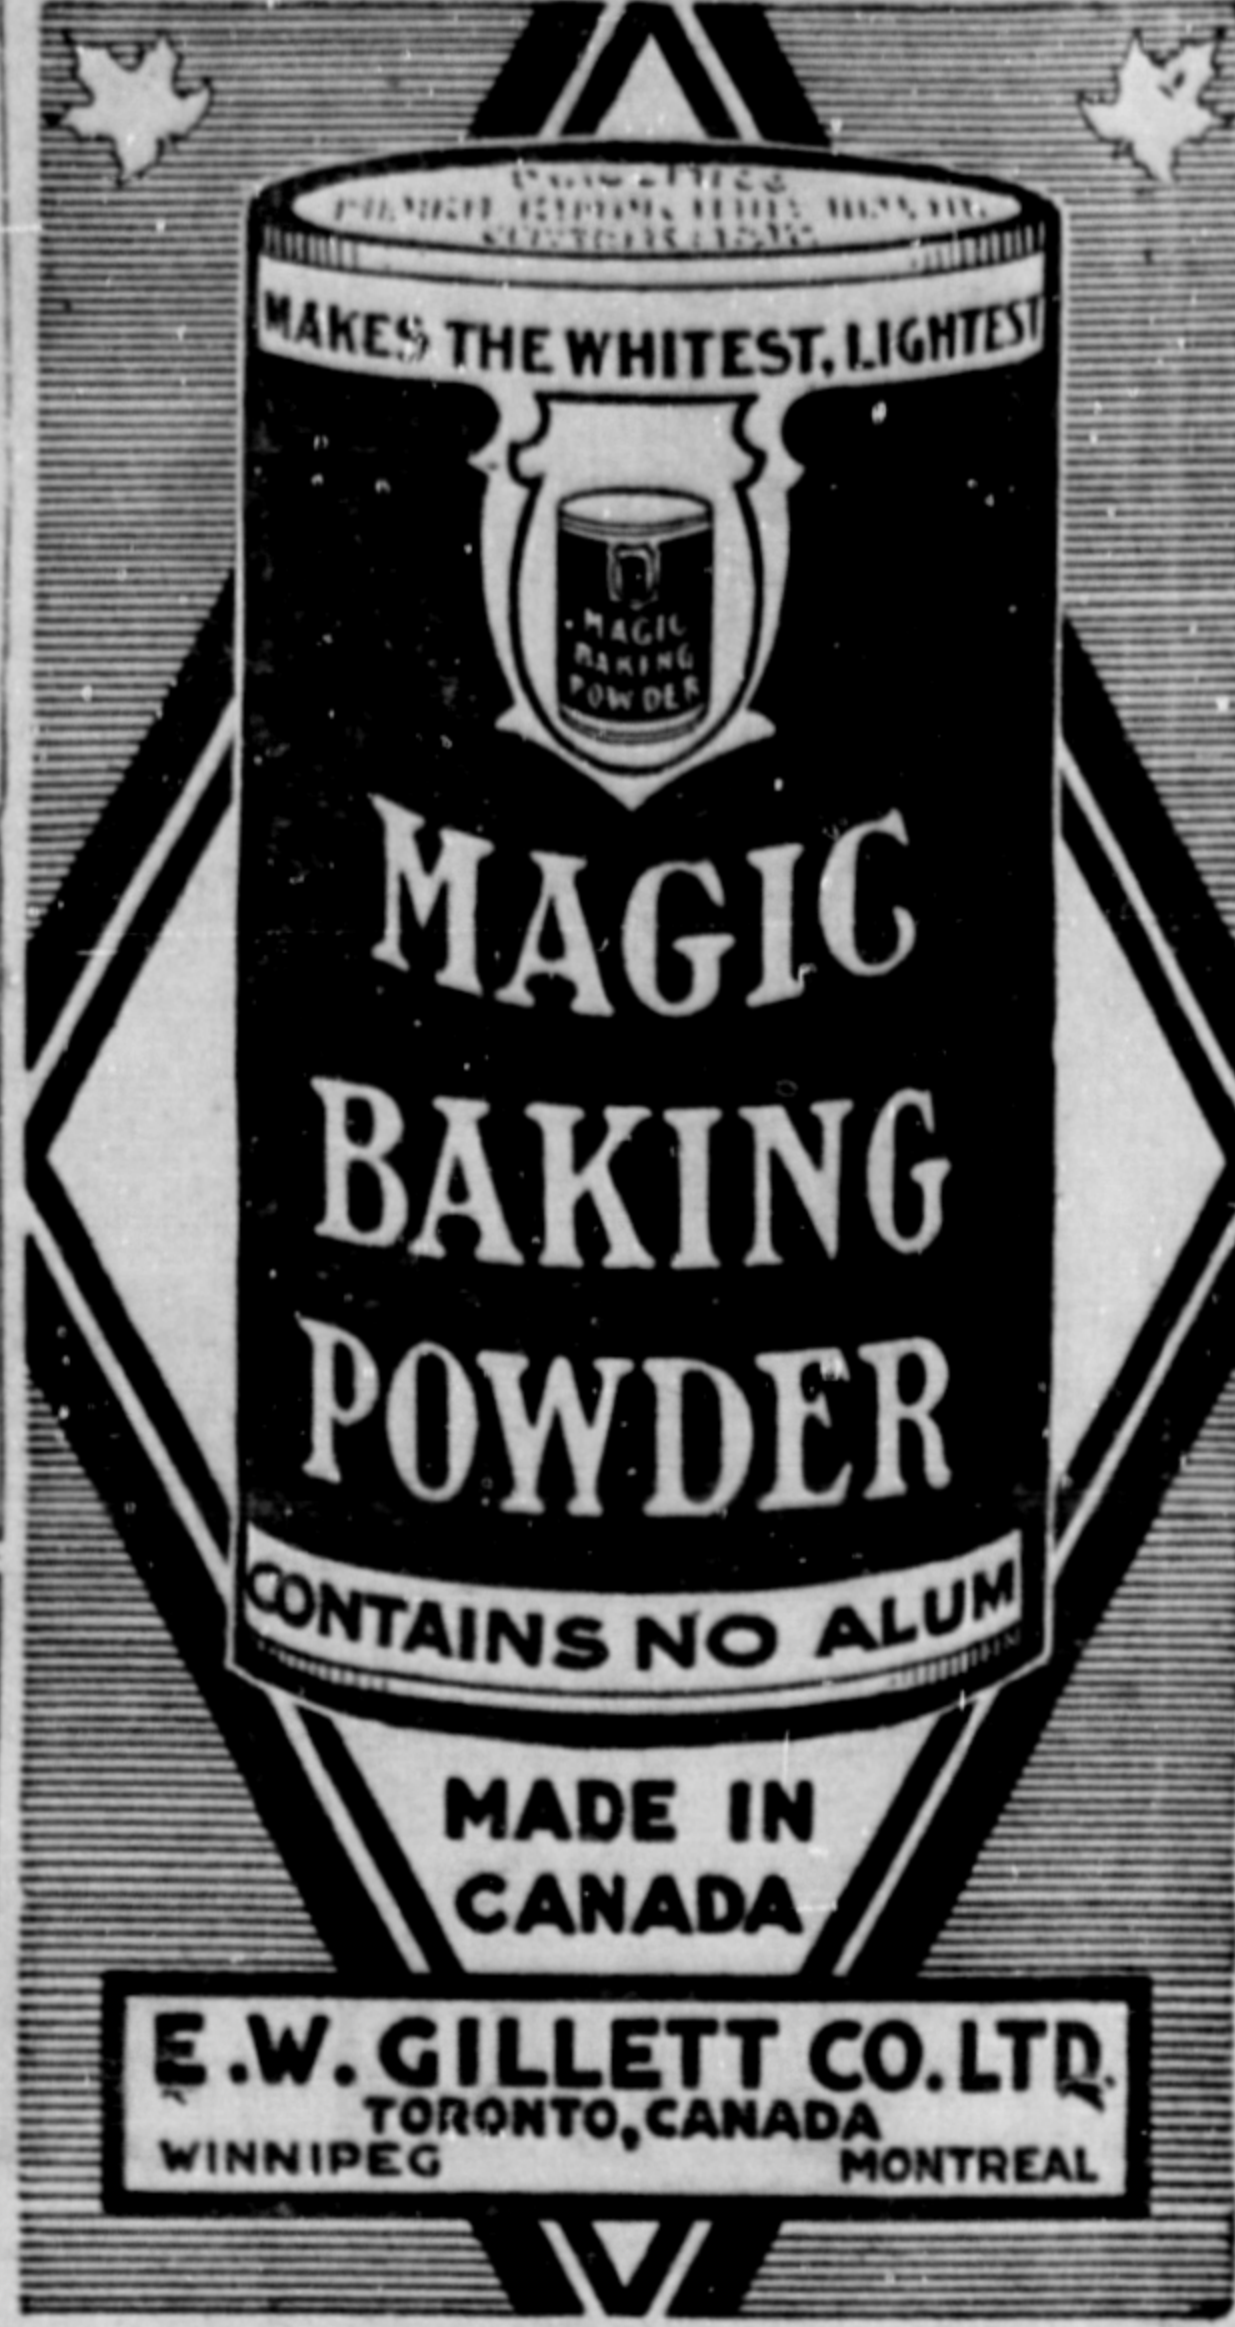

It has been suggested that the Mayor call a meeting and arrange to charter a special train, round up all the pessimists and ship them out of town to Prince George or some other point up the line where they may enjoy themselves. This is no place for them. When things get going here they will have a bad time.

Cattle Ranching In the Interior.

There is no place better suited for cattle ranching than the lands of interior British Columbia, especially the lands included in the area set apart by the Land Settlement Board for their experiment. Much of the land is very lightly timbered, often having nothing but a few small poplars on it. These can be easily slashed and if the land is grazed by cattle the underbrush can be kept down and in a few years the roots will rot and may be easily removed. That is what experts say.

The difficulty with most of the farmers up the valley is that they are not depending on farming for a living, and they have not enough cattle to stock their farms. The Provincial Government recently helped them to purchase stock on the prairies and over five hundred head were shipped in. The result will be that some useful herds will be started, but there were not half enough cattle introduced for the amount of feed in sight.

It will be a great cattle country undoubtedly and Prince Rupert will be able to secure the greater part of her beef and dairy products there some day. In the meantime anything which can be done to help bring that district to the fore should be encouraged.

Your Dainty Things

can be washed over and over again with Lux and still retain the delightful charm of freshness and newness. Very desirable, this, in war time! Lux is so gentle in its cleansing power that it cannot harm the most delicate fabric.

How to wash a silk garment
 Use a tablespoonful of Lux to a gallon of water. Dissolve in boiling or very hot water and whisk into a thick, creamy lather. Add cold water until luke warm. Dip your garment through the Lux suds many times. Work it about, gently squeezing the suds through the soiled parts but do not rub! Rinse in three waters—clear and also luke warm. Press the water out—but do not wring. Dry in the shade and when nearly dry press on the wrong side with a warm iron—never a hot one. Press creeps from side to side and stretch a very little as you press. They will look just like new!
