Ships Returning To the Pacific.

It is satisfactory news which came yesterday to the effect that arrangements are being made with the Imperial Ministry of Shipping for ships to return to the Pacific routes at an early date. It will take some time to have the ships reconverted into passenger carriers, following their use for war purposes. It will also take a little time to replace those vessels which have been lost.

Prince Rupert cannot expect to get a line running out of this port until such time as the Canadian vessels return to their regular runs and displace some of the Japanese ships which are now engaged in that business. There has been all the business that could be handled offering at the older ports during the war period; so that it was useless to expect them to come here. Just as soon as they find themselves crowded out of the business at Vancouver, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco, they will be open to put some of their ships on a new route.

During war time the Japanese have had not only their own regular business but also that usually handled by the C. P. R. vessels and the lines of freighters which usually ply on the Pacific, such as the Blue Funnel and the ships handled by Frank Waterhouse. With those running regularly and taking a good deal of the business it should be easy to secure some of the smaller vessels of the Japanese or other lines. The ideal method would be to run Canadian vessels, but any line that is willing to put ships on the run will be welcomed here.

Housing Problem Must Be Tackled.

There is practically no accommodation here for those who wish to keep house in the city, and even rooms are difficult to secure. There are people looking for accommodation constantly and none can be found. When the industrial movement commences here, after the new year, the very first thing to be done will be to provide for the workmen who will be coming. Probably the new company will undertake to house some of their men, but there will be others besides company workers. The moment it is announced that work on the shipbuilding plant has actually begun there will be an influx of all sorts of people. To take care of these will be a problem. It is something to be considered very soon. This is not a good building season, but there are men idle just now and with the assurance that the work is to proceed, a start might be made on the erection of cottages or portable houses as a temporary expedient.

When Insurance Consider Insurance When Planning to Build.

Those who are preparing to erect business buildings should consider well the possibilities of making them permanent structures that will conform to the building restrictions and thus reduce the fire risks. A very few concrete or brick buildings among the wooden structures would materially reduce the insurance rates on the whole town and be a great asset. The erection of the Royal Bank building reduced the rate on all other structures in the block one per cent. A similar building on or near the other corner would make a further reduction. Insurance rates should certainly enter into any calculations for building. A considerable cut in the rates would make it worth while to spend a good deal more to have the structures of a permanent character.

Women Voting In Great Britain.

Today is a great day for women. The mother of parliaments has at last recognized them and they now have equal rights with men. At the next session there is a possibility of women rising in their seats and addressing Mr. Speaker.

Keir Hardie was the first member to sit in the house wearing anything but a silk hat. Now it is very possible that ribbon and flower bedecked head-gear will relieve the monotony of the scene and plumes may wave among the stove pipes. Possibly though women, with the added dignity of office, will take a notion to reform their wearing apparel and put plumes and feathers into the discard, where they should have gone many years ago.
