ReconstructionTheme of Address.

When the war broke out it dislocated business. Everything was upset, yet only a comparatively few men went away at that time and the rest were taken gradually throughout the four years during which the big fight continued. The change, therefore, was not very sudden. The coming of peace is a different thing. The vast armies that it took four years to accumulate will be dissolved in a few months. The men will return in large numbers and the general disturbance is consequently greater.

The dislocation of business on the outbreak of war was so great that many people were financially ruined. Gradually people adapted themselves to the changed conditions until war had become part of their life. This is suddenly changed and there is again dislocation of business as illustrated by the shutting down of the spruce camps here and the consequent change in the trend of local activities.

Gradual Adaptation Is Desirable.

To so adapt ourselves to these changes that there will be the least possible disturbance to business generally and no injustice to anyone, is the work of today. That was the subject on which Alex. Manson spoke to the St. Andrew's Society last night. He emphasized the necessity of getting the social instrument in tune once more as quickly as possible.

Mr. Manson is a student of affairs. He has a wide outlook and on this occasion he showed that he had grasped the situation. He spoke of the necessity of giving our best to the returned man. By that he did not mean necessarily what any one man thought was best. Men for the sake of political gain were willing to promise anything whether good for the returned men or not. The general idea to be gathered from the address was that the returned man should get everything which would help him to keep his place without handicap in the reconstructed world, and thus be able to preserve his self-respect.

Soldiers' Settlements Are Not Desirable.

Mr. Manson last night spoke of the undesirability of the establishment of soldiers' settlements. He did not think they could be a success. He advocated rather the settling of the soldiers who wished to farm in the more developed parts of the country where they would not have to endure so much of the hardship of pioneer life but would enjoy the advantages of civilization. There they also would be in a position to learn from their neighbors and adapt themselves to the requirements of the new life. He said he was not sure whether that was the policy of the Government or not, but it was the policy he advocated and any other he felt sure was doomed to failure.

The average soldier wishes to return to civil life, not grouped with other soldiers where everything would remind them of the terrible strains they have undergone, but mixed with the general civilian population where the tendency would be to forget and where the new duties and associations would be sufficiently engrossing to cover up and gradually eliminate from the mind the experiences of the great war.

Workingmen Have The Worst Prospect.

Those who have the worst prospect on their return from overseas are the workingmen. The great army of labor may find itself possibly without occupation and the man just returned, having lost touch with the situation here, is under a handicap. It is particularly for these that help is needed. They are the men for whom provision must be made. That does not mean that they must be changed from men who earn their own living into "remittance men." That is not the reconstruction idea. Conditions must be made such that they can easily find employment and mingle with their fellows as equals and thus forget the past.

Possibly the suggestion of forgetting the past may be mistaken. It simply means to have the vivid experiences of the battlefield so dimmed and mellowed that they no longer obtrude themselves on the life of the present to such an extent as to prove a handicap in the work and life.

For Biliousness

Biliousness is a common form of indigestion. It is brought on by food-waste which the stomach, intestines and bowels fail to expel. If you will take a few doses of Beecham's Pills, when bilious, you will soon rid yourself of the impurities, relieve sick headache, stimulate the liver and bile and tone the stomach. Healthy conditions are quickly re-established by using
