INTERESTING VISIT OF JAPANESE FISH BOAT TO SEATTLE

Schooner Houzan Maru Brought Cargo of Stockfish—Description of Vessel and Cargo.

The arrival of the Japanese auxiliary schooner Houzan Maru at Seattle on Jan. 27 from Yokohama direct with a full cargo of Japanese stockfish for the American market is of exceptional interest as the first full cargo of this commodity to reach an American port from Japan, and probably the largest single shipment that has been brought from that country, says the Pacific Fisherman. In conjunction with the recent arrival of several cargoes of salt codfish, together with considerable stockfish, in Japanese schooners, at San Francisco, it gives reason for serious thought among the American producers of codfish as to how they are to meet Oriental competition, which in the absence of a tariff on stockfish and codfish is likely to grow rapidly in the near future.

Size and Design.
The Houzan Maru herself is an interesting boat. She is an auxiliary 3-masted wooden schooner of modern type, of 485 gross tons; 135 ft. long, 35 ft. wide, with a draft of 17 feet, and powered with a 120 h.p. 2-cylinder hot-bulb engine, which runs on kerosene at considerable expense, but looks as if it were designed to use fuel oil. The hull is copper sheathed. The vessel was built last year at Shinagawa, Japan, for the Japan Fishery company, but is a freighter rather than a fishing vessel. Her first voyage was to Kamchatka for salt salmon, the Seattle trip being her second. She is under charter to Mitsui & Co.

Engine.
The engine is the product of the Ikegai Iron Works, Shiba, Tokyo. In use it is found to be small to be of much service except in docking or to maintain headway in a calm, being capable of driving the vessel at a speed of about 4 knots. Her cargo on this trip consisted of 5,000 bales of stockfish, of about 110 lbs. each. Yosuke Igarashi, director, and Taichi Takesawa, councillor, of the Japan Fishery company, the owners, reached Seattle just after her arrival, having come by steamer via San Francisco, and are making a study of methods used in the codfish industry of the Pacific coast. A second cargo of stockfish, imported by the same interests, arrived at Seattle Feb. 6 on the auxiliary schooner Kashimi Maru.

New Markets.

The catching of codfish and the production of stockfish in Japan is an old and well established industry, but until recent years no market was sought except in the Orient. Japan, however, is very favorably located with regard to the prolific cod fisheries of the Okhotsk Sea, and with the introduction of modern fishing methods, largely as a result of investigations made in the United States, production has so expanded as to demand new markets. Within the last few years a business of some importance has been built up with South America, the West Indies and other countries, and a start has been made in the exploitation of the United States markets.

There was a largely attended meeting of the Board of Trade held at the rooms last night, President McCaffery in the chair. He showed samples of concrete bricks made from local rock which were very hard and which had been tested as to their fireproof qualities.

Mr. Bruce also referred to several out of town possibilities, especially to a lime brick which it was proposed to make up the Skeena river and for which there was great need in town. These brick were eminently suitable for building purposes.

Mr. Bruce also dealt with the pottery clay and other material, samples of which he had seen.
