COLONEL PECK DEFENDS CURRIE

Canadians Too Wise to be Caught in "Booby Traps," He Says.

A special dispatch to the Vancouver Province from Ottawa signed by Roland Hill, says: "Sir Sam Hughes's sensational charge of unnecessary losses among the Canadian troops at Cambrai and Mons, which is regarded here as aimed at Lieut. General Currie, the corps commander, has caused great indignation among the soldier members of the Commons and will not go unchallenged. Lieut. Colonel Peck, V. C., D. S. O., will be among the early speakers who will refute this charge and point out how deplorable it is, especially at the present time.

"General Currie needs no defence either as to his military ability or the care he took in all engagements to conserve the lives of the soldiers," said Colonel Peck, "but such wild charges as Sir Sam Hughes made in the Commons must be answered. I was aghast when the former Minister of Militia made his sensational statements," he added.

"It is deplorable that such unfounded allegations should be made when there are thousands of mothers and wives with sorrowing hearts still far from healing, whose wounds will be opened again by the ill-considered words of Sir Sam.

A Fine Leader.

"General Currie, in my opinion and in the opinion of most of the soldiers I have come in contact with, is one of the finest leaders in the war, and the care and safety of his men always took first place in his mind.

"As for Cambrai, sometimes perhaps it is better to go around the burning place, and it was done there. Canadian troops were two miles beyond Cambrai on the night before the first Canadians entered the streets of the town. It was friendly rivalry between Imperial troops and the Canadians that caused the rush through the streets. There were more prisoners alone taken than casualties occurring to us in the fighting.

"As to 'booby traps,' I believe not one Canadian soldier was caught by these. The Canadian in fighting is far too wise a bird to be trapped and any prisoners we had gathered in were quickly used to clear them up.

Higher Direction.

"The attack on Mons, I am sure, was at the direction of the higher command and was well carried out. Our casualties were light and had the Germans not carried out the armistice terms, we had gained a fine strategic position by its capture.

"Colonel Peck probably will be one of the speakers on the Address this week. It is his intention to meet the 16th Battalion he commanded and to accompany it to Winnipeg, where it will be demobilized. It is possible, if the first division's return is delayed, that he will return to England to rejoin it.

"On Tuesday Colonel Peck was one of the dinner guests of the Duke of Devonshire at Government House."
