HOUSING IN PRINCE RUPERT

To the Editor:—

Owing to the area of the city there is a risk of overcrowding that may in the future lead to slums of a dangerous nature; but at the present time the citizens have a splendid opportunity to make this the model city of Canada.

On a frontage of 75 feet, a well arranged plan will give accommodation for four families and each suite will contain two public rooms, two bedrooms, a bath room, kitchen and private balcony, also four small gardens at the back and front, with separate gates, walks and separate entrance to each suite. One furnace or boiler will heat the building in place of four, one to each family.

On a frontage of one hundred feet, a terrace apartment can be built of eight suites, each containing two public rooms, three bedrooms, kitchen, bath room, private balcony and a store-room in the basement. The ground floor suites to have their own separate entrance with gardens in front.

The writer believes that the citizens of Prince Rupert will take full advantage of the most modern plans and designs to make the place a model and beautiful city.

Lumber buildings can be erected as "slow burning" and made sound-proof in walls and floors. The three-story terrace, or higher apartments should have walls of solid brick or concrete, with "slow burning" floors and the partition walls made sound proof. In a terrace apartment, as described, the rooms would all be large and well lighted.
