U. S. DESERTER IS ALSO A HEROLeaves Uncle Sam's Army Without Permission to Fight with Canadians in France.Attired in uniform and covered with medals, a young and handsome Canadian soldier, his pretty bride at his side, a day or two ago limped into the office of United States Attorney Robert C.
Saunders at Seattle. He had been wounded in the leg at Lens—and gassed at Marycourt.Mr. Saunders looked up admiringly—he himself had three sons in the service."I am a deserter from the United States Army," said the wounded fighter quietly.As the federal prosecutor gaped in astonishment, his visitor pulled from his pocket an honorable discharge from the Canadian Expeditionary Forces with which he had fought in France since November, 1915. The discharge bore the date of March 14, 1919.Can He Square Himself.Can a man who deserted from the United States Army in peace times clear his record by subsequent service at the front with the forces of one of Uncle Sam's Allies?This is the knotty problem Enos C. Smith, a native of Goldendale, Wash., American citizen who longed for a chance to battle the Huns, put up to District Attorney Saunders.The question has not yet been answered, but the War Department's reply will be in the affirmative, if Mr. Saunders in his capacity as a private citizen, has his way. The prosecutor yesterday passed on Smith's request for an honorable discharge from the United States Army to The Adjutant General at Washington, D.
C."Prior to the great world war," Mr. Saunders wrote the army officer, "I never thought I might learn to honor a deserter from the army of the United States, but permit me to say that I take pleasure in serving in any way in my power a man who deserted from a place of safety to one of danger in order to help keep civilization alive in the world.""BLIND ADVENTURE"
