Constitution of Bolshevik Government.

In view of the wide interest taken in anything pertaining to the Bolshevik movement many people would like to know something about the constitution of the Russian Soviet Government. From a perusal of a section of it there seems no doubt that it is what we should call class legislation of the most striking kind. Jerrimandering the list of voters is provided for and political opposition will be avoided.

The following are quotations from it:

The all-Russian Congress of Soviets is the supreme power of the Russian Socialist Federative Soviet Republic. (Paragraph 24.)

The all-Russian Congress of Soviets is composed of representatives of the town Soviets in the ratio of one delegate for every 25,000 voters and of representatives of the government (or country) Soviets in the ratio of one delegate for every 125,000 voters. (Paragraph 25.)

(This paragraph guarantees the predominating influence of the urban proletariat.)

The all-Russian Congress of Soviets must be summoned by the all-Russian Executive Committee not less than twice a year. (Paragraph 26.)

(The Congress meets in practice about once every three months. Its sittings last from two to three days.)

The all-Russian Congress of Soviets chooses the all-Russian Executive Committee to the number of not more than 200 delegates. (Paragraph 28.)

The Central Executive Committee is responsible in every way to the Congress of Soviets. During the interval between the Congresses the Central Executive Committee is the supreme authority of the Republic. (Paragraphs 29 and 30.)

The Central Executive Committee is the legislative, administrative and controlling organ of the R. S. F. S. R. (Paragraph 31.)

The Central Executive Committee forms the Council of People's Commissars for the general administration of the affairs of the R. S. F. S. R. (Paragraph 35.)

The Council of Commissars is responsible to the Central Executive Committee, who can control or cancel all its actions.

Paragraph 64 gives the rules governing the elections to the Soviets. Both sexes over the age of eighteen may vote if they belong to one of the following categories: (a) All those engaged in producing the necessary means of life, and also those engaged in household work for the maintenance of the above-mentioned toilers of production—that is, workmen and servants of all classes engaged in industry and agriculture, peasants and cossacks, who do not employ hired labor. (b) Soldiers and sailors of the Soviet army and navy, (c) Citizens mentioned in (a) and (b) who have lost their power of working.

Then follows a significant amendment under the heading of Note No. 1.

Local Soviets may, with the approval of the Central authority, lower the age limit fixed in the present statute.

Paragraph 65 gives the list of those who may not vote, even if they belong to the categories mentioned in Paragraph 64: (a) All people employing hired labor for the sake of profit. (b) All those who live on profits not made by their own labor—i.e., people living on interest from capital, income from industrial enterprises or from property. (c) Private traders, trade and commercial agents. (d) Monks and religious employees of the Church. (e) Servants and agents of the ancient police and likewise all members of the Imperial Russian family.

The real safeguards of the Soviet Constitution, however, is to be found in paragraph 23, which runs as follows:

"Guided by the interests of the working class as a whole the R. S. F. S. R. deprives certain individuals and certain groups of their rights, which are used by them contrary to the interests of the Socialist Republic."

This statute is aimed at the anti-Bolshevik Socialists, and has been applied with the usual Bolshevik rigor.
