LARGE CROWD HEARD JACK KAVANAGH DISCUSS MERITS OF THE ONE BIG UNION

age enough to do so since. The old organization was not capable of meeting the situation.

Six-Hour Day.

With the One Big Union was linked up the six-hour day. It was their business to see that the men who were coming back were fitted into industry. It would be useless to put others out of jobs in order to put the soldiers in, that did not solve the situation. The only method was to create more jobs and to do this they proposed the six-hour day. They suggested this because they did not wish to see food riots. In those riots it was members of their own class that were always hurt.

"If under the six-hour day there is no profit to be made, what concern is that of ours?" inquired the speaker. "We have been told of the sacrifices that have been made for the war, but all the time they have been piling up their millions from selling bum boots, bum rifles and from bacon contracts."

Difficulties in Way.

Mr. Kavanagh went on to say that there was no longer any excuse for a food shortage, but they must remember that there was to the south a country of a hundred million people and the magnates there would put down trouble on this side the line. He spoke of the 180 mounted police that had been placed in Vancouver. British Columbia was the most advanced intellectually of all the provinces and any attempt to take control of the industries would be met with armed force from the United States. When the police could not handle the situation the militia would be called out and guns used. He had discussed the matter with Perry, the head of the Mounted Police, and had suggested to him that one of the first things to do in case of trouble would be to put every editor in Vancouver in Jail. The speaker claimed that the industrial organization would do away with a number of small strikes but give them power to carry through.

Greetings to Spartans.

Discussing the sending of greetings to the Spartans of Germany from the Calgary convention, Mr. Kavanagh said there were people who had not guts enough to get up and say anything at the convention but who came home and dissented from what was done. He quoted The Daily News' account of the St. George's Day banquet speech of S. D. Macdonald as follows: "Mr. Macdonald said he had before taken occasion to denounce the sending of greetings to the Germans. The message did not represent the views of organized labor in Prince Rupert."

Mr. Kavanagh said that if Macdonald opposed the sending of greetings he was there on two occasions when it was up for discussion. If he was earning his money from those who sent him there he should have objected at that time.

Telling of the way in which the Spartans had opposed the Kaiser and the junker crowd and of how Liebknecht had been imprisoned along with many of his followers and how many had been shot down for their opposition and how in the end it was the Spartan and Bolshevik movement which had broken up the Germans and brought about the end of the war and saved the lives of thousands of workers. Mr. Kavanagh said it was to these people that they had sent greetings. They had also sent greetings at the same time to other workers at Glasgow and other points. When they sent greetings to the Spartans they were sending to workers who had overthrown their military masters.

Bolshevik.

He then outlined the Russian situation and said that the Bolsheviks had offered to take the field against Germany if the Allies would supply them with arms and ammunition and supplies as long as they did not interfere with the internal situation. To this proposal they received no answer.

Big Union.

In the One Big Union there would be a Central Trades Council and district councils but before they would do anything they must cut away from international organizations. The present system was not effective. While the employers had developed into trusts the men had drifted wider before purchasing a baking powder that may possibly contain injurious ingredients. Many food scientists claim that baking powder containing alum is unsafe for use in food. The mere fact that some brands of baking powder have the words "No Alum" on the label is not sufficient proof that they are what they are represented to be. Our chemists find a good many have "No Alum" on the outside but large quantities of it inside.

Harry Hanson, Esq.,
Prince Rupert, B. C.,

Dear Sir:

Your Hanson Hot Water Coil has been in our range for just one year, and in all this time it has been 100 per cent plus efficient. I use the "plus" advisedly for not only has the coil provided an abundance of not warm but HOT water at all times, but by placing the forty-gallon tank in our large ten by ten bathroom it has kept it cosy in the coldest weather.

Although our range is small, Mrs. Young informs me she cannot see that the baking qualities are affected in the least by the coil.

In your perfection of a modern household necessity, I congratulate you.

Sincerely,
(Signed) R. B. YOUNG.
