BISMARCK THE BEAST AS SEEN BY BOYD

Among the many notable personages to whom Frank M. Boyd introduces us in "A Pelican's Tale" are Moltke and Bismarck, both of whom Mr. Boyd saw in a State procession in Cologne in 1881. Moltke "was a very curious looking old man with a dull red face lined with thousands of wrinkles. He had no eyelashes or eyebrows, and the fair hair he wore on the top of his withered old face was his only right of purchase." He seemed to Mr. Boyd like "a singularly observant old owl."

Some trivial accident had upset Bismarck, and his face wore "an expression of absolutely pestal bad temper." Another characteristic of Bismarck's is illustrated by a story Mr. Boyd tells.

On one of the great Chancellor's visits to London he was taken over a brewery, where he was shown a huge glass which it was reckoned a feat to empty at one draught. Bismarck had it filled with specially strong ale, and emptied it twice. A few minutes later he observed, "I am droonk," an insisted on being led to the Thames Embankment—not to drown himself, or history might have been different—but to sit down and look at the river. After two hours' contemplation of "al-laying Thames," or as much as he could see of it through the rim of his hat, he rose and walked to his carriage without assistance.
