Germans Must Sign Treaty.

Lloyd George says that Germany must sign the treaty of peace. If she will not sign now, the armies on the field will march right to Berlin and dictate peace there.

Many people would like to see German occupation by the Allies. They feel that France and Belgium endured all the horrors of German occupation and they think Germany should feel something of what it means to have foreign invaders marching through her streets. As yet she has had little of that. On the other hand the thinking part of the community want to see the peace treaty signed and the soldiers returning to civil occupations. They realize something of the evils of militarism. Until the armies are disbanded there will be no settled conditions.

Reign of Hate Follows Strikes.

There is always a lot of bad feeling engendered at the time of a strike and so strong is the feeling on either side that the reign of hate lasts for many years. That is one of the bad features of the system. The longer the strike lasts the more strained the feeling becomes, and if it continues until either side is being pinched there is an intense feeling of hate cultivated that lasts indefinitely.

Hate is like sand in the wheels of life. It injures most the person who holds the feeling against the other. It is a boomerang. It always strikes back.

Because of this aftermath of big industrial struggles there is a great responsibility on the leaders on either side. The man who is always setting class against class and urging the men to take drastic action and to look on agreements as scraps of paper, is largely responsible on one side; and on the other is the man who treats his employees unfairly, who underpays them and makes them work under bad conditions. Coupled with the unreasonable employer is the profiteer who by astuteness and trickery takes advantage of the conditions under which we live to wring huge profits from the necessities of life. All these things are factors in bringing about the reign of hate.

Too Much Waste After Utopia.

The difficulty with the worker of today is that he wants to arrive at the gates of paradise at one bound. The stirring events of the great war have shown him that so many things are possible, that he cannot see why he cannot bring about a Utopia right here and now.

The difficulty with the employers is that they fail to recognize the changed conditions following the war and they are unwilling to give way in the least.

As long as this feeling exists there can be no industrial peace. Friction is bound to continue, and in many cases the innocent are the ones who suffer.
