St. Dunstan's Hostel
Works Miracles.

People who have never visited St. Dunstan's Hostel find it difficult to believe all the tales which are told of the wonderful work which the blind men do after being trained there. The loss of one sense seems to stimulate the activity of the others with the result that after a course of training men are able to do work which even men who see would find it most difficult to accomplish.

St. Dunstan's is known throughout the world. Its fame has spread and with the knowledge of the work it is doing comes the desire to share in the work by contributing money to keep it going and to enlarge its scope. Just now there are efforts being made to raise money for this deserving institution, and it is certain that the results will justify the efforts.

When men have gone to the front and entered the jaws of death to be rescued, but with one of the senses gone, the least those at home can do is to provide them that training which will give them the prospect of a useful life and the enjoyment of the senses which are left.

Customs Receipts Show Prosperity.

The customs returns which were published in this paper yesterday indicate a degree of prosperity here which is remarkable. The total for August and September of this year is nearly double the total for the corresponding months of last year, the figures being for 1917 $39,569.25 and for 1918 $72,995.46. These figures speak volumes. They indicate that, without any additional stimulus from shipbuilding, business is improving at a rapid rate.

Semi-Official In Germany.

The Cologne Gazette has recently published a bitter and vicious attack on German semi-official veracity. It declares that everything published as semi-official has been shamelessly and futilely false.

At last after four years a German journal has hit on that characteristic of their system of government which has betrayed them more than any other. The German semi-official system is peculiarly its own. It consists of spreading deliberate and tenacious lies and giving them an official tinge, but not quite official authority. It is a system typical of their pedantic false cunning. Inevitably the German people for a long time believed implicitly in information so disseminated, and all their expert writers adopted it as their text. For a long time the Germans believed that the label "Semi-Official" stamped all such information as reliable; now they know it was merely used as a covering for the crudest lies. That is the explanation of the "Dent in our home front." They are passing through a phase of intense and dreadful enlightenment.

The Allies have been semi-officially annihilated twenty times over. They have semi-officially had all their tanks destroyed. Semi-officially all their available tonnage is at the bottom of the sea together with a large proportion of their battle fleet. Semi-officially we have been starving for eighteen months. Foch's reserves were semi-officially used up by June. Semi-officially not a single American soldier would cross the Atlantic, partly because of the "U" boats, partly because of the bitter anti-war feeling in the United States. Semi-officially even if they came they would be an unarmed rabble. And so on through the dreary list of silly lies.

Germans Know
Stories Were Lies

Now the Germans know they were lies. They see their armies beaten on all fronts. They see a vastly increased and rejuvenated Allied army in hot and invincible pursuit. They see from this that the "U" boat has utterly failed. They see themselves without a friend in the world steadily breaking up through being submitted to an intolerable pressure. They are being bombed and they are not bombing back.

No wonder their spirit is failing them, no wonder that poor old mountebank Hindenburg has to put his name to four columns of hysterical twaddle. Surely if Germans read Allied leaflets with such demoralizing avidity it must be because they wish to know the truth, which they cannot obtain in their own government-ridden journals. Why do the Allies take no notice of German leaflets? They drop plenty. That is the deadly unanswerable question.

A few days before the German defeat and retreat from the Switch line, Von Ardenne declared that the German retreat was over. Another writer declared that Germans would make a decisive stand on the Vis-Queant line. By the time the paper appeared in England we were four miles past that line. In the Bapaume fighting all the German papers stated that we had suffered a heavy defeat with the most dreadful losses. We published our losses and confounded them by so doing. We have just caught them out beautifully over the figures of "U" boat sinkings. They had been denied, of course. Now all these errors were made because the writers were relying on semi-official information. One always knew that this moral debacle would come one day. You 'cannot fool all the people all the time.' Hindenburg believed that you could, but then he is hardly as wise a man as Lincoln.
