FISH PROVIDE OWN LIGHT IN DEPTHS OF THE OCEAN

PHOSPHORESCENT GLOW ILLUMINATES NEIGHBORHOOD WHERE THEY PASS—ROWS OF LAMPS PROVIDED BY NATURE—IMMENSE WATER PRESSURE.

Sunlight is of no use to fish inhabiting the deeper portions of the sea. In the waters off the coast of Porto Rico, where the depth is about five miles, day and night are the same, and it was originally believed that fish lived in perpetual darkness.

It has now been discovered that this is not so. Although there are certain portions of the ocean where light never penetrates (and where fish, in accordance with nature's economical rule, are provided with no eyes), the majority of deep sea inhabitants live in a blaze of phosphorescent light produced by themselves. In other words, these fish carry their own lamps.

Sometimes a fish will have only one lamp, which may be compared with an acetylene lamp on a bicycle. It throws a penetrating shaft of light through the water ahead and the fish's path is perpetually illuminated.

Have Rows of Lamps

Others are provided with organs in which are fitted rows of lamps, which either play upon the water ahead or flash through the water on either side like the illuminated port holes of a ship. The lamps are fitted with lenses and reflectors and their power is accentuated by the tremendous water pressure and peculiar conditions under which they live.

At a depth of 2,500 fathoms the pressure of water upon fish is twenty-five times greater than that required to drive a railway train. Such deep sea fish as have been brought to the surface, although retaining some of their phosphorescent properties, are assumed to have lost the greater portion of their brilliance.

One's imagination finds it difficult to grasp what the great, artificially-lit water chambers must be like. Far below the ocean liners' are enormous watery domes, icy cold, soundless yet as brilliantly illuminated as though the sun were pouring upon them.

These illuminated spheres are not stationary. They move, as the living lamps move, leaving behind them utter darkness.

Deep Sea Angler

One of the most remarkable of these fish is the deep-sea angler fish. Like its shallow water relative, it has an enormous mouth with ugly irregular teeth, and a pendent tentacle by which it catches its prey. But whereas the latter's tentacle is designed to resemble something edible, the former's is designed like a "Will-o'-the-Wisp" light, which tempts and attracts prey into the waiting mouth. The deep-sea angler fish is found at a depth of 14,700 feet.

Most deep-sea fish bear a strong resemblance to some species of fish inhabiting the waters above them, apart from their quality of luminosity. This suggests that fish migrate from one depth to another, acquiring in the course of time the physical characteristic to their new environment. The nearer the surface they get the less they shine—another example of nature's logic.

But these migrations must be very gradual affairs, for a sudden

DANCING DISPLAY BY CLASSES GIVEN LAST SATURDAY AFTERNOON

Affair Arranged by Mrs. Crew and Miss Cheston Proved a Delightful Success.

The dancing display presented by Mrs. H. O. Crew and Miss Cheston in the St. Andrew's hall on Saturday afternoon went off splendidly from beginning to end and was a great success. There were 171 visitors, besides the many assistants, and all enjoyed the exhibition dancing to the full and also had the opportunity to dance themselves.

The program was as follows: Folk Dance—Misses Enid Williams, Claire Williams, Tecla Fulton, Margaret Acland, Helen McCaffery and Nellie O'Reilly.

Spanish dance by Miss Lorna McLaren.

Rose Dance—Misses Elizabeth Groves, Lorna McLaren, Verna Thompson and Norma Rogers.

Irish jig by Misses Alice Spencer and Laura Frizzell.

Highland Schottische by the entire class.

Sword dance by Miss Verna Thomson.

Highland fling by Misses Grace Ackroyd, Elizabeth Williams, Norma Rogers, Lorna McLaren and Margaret Acland.

Sisinnella Dance by Miss Margaret Acland.

Gavotte by Misses Gladys Collier and Alice Sutherland.

Pekoe Dance by Misses Enid Williams, Claire Williams, Tecla Fulton, Helen McCaffery, Margaret Acland, Nellie O'Reilly and Florence McNeill.

Russian dance by Misses Norma Rogers, Lorna McLaren, Grace Ackroyd and Elizabeth Groves.

The Music.

Mrs. Hinton played the accompaniment for the exhibition dances and for the Scotch and Irish dances. James Sturgeon played the bag pipes. For the guests' dancing music was provided by Sam Brail, F. W. Browne and Miss Blanche Curtin. Mrs. Crew and Miss Cheston were assisted by Misses Erskine, Dorothy Tremayne, Pete Tremayne, Rhoda Saunders, Helen Wallace, Constance McMullen, Ruth Rix, Hester Wright, Lorna Tite, Myra Harvey, Margaret Palmer, and Gertrude Nelson, who waited on the tea tables. Harry Ward and Cedric Duncan were on the door. For the general decoration of the hall, Mrs. Crew was aided considerably by the decorations that had been left by the Daughters of the Empire and the Masons from their dances, while Miss Cheston made the table decoration arrangements.
