Here's the way Babe Ruth hits home runs: (1) He dusts off his hands and wipes the dirt on the handle of his bat, (2) gives the old war club a couple of swings to see that everything is ship shape, (3) stands up to the plate facing the pitcher with his weight on his left foot ready to lunge forward to meet the ball, (4) takes a mighty swing with all the power of his broad shoulders, and (5) watches the horsehide begin its sky rocketing before he ambles towards first for the circuit.

PEARL WHITE SEEN IN "THIEF" TONIGHT AT THE WESTHOLME

Pearl White, who appears in "The Thief" at the Westholme tonight has in this play a story that has been translated into almost every known language and a play that has brought its author, Henri Bernstein, between $500,000 and $750,000 in royalties to date.

Bernstein came from a very wealthy family. He ran through his fortune, and, being forced to earn a living, turned playwright. His first drama was accepted by the French Academy.

Miss White had known the play and wished to appear in it a long time before Mr. Fox got the screen rights for her. Her plot is as gripping on the screen as on the stage, and gives Miss White a splendid opportunity to show her dramatic talents.
