Walk to Port Edward and What I Saw by the Way.
By H. F. P.
One day I met a man who had just walked to Port Edward and back.
"Did you see anything," I asked.
"No, nothing but scenery, water and trees and railway track."
Remembering this answer, I determined to walk to Port Edward and try to discover if there was anything interesting besides scenery, water and trees and railway track. I did it Sunday and it was a great success. I saw and heard a lot of things.
Being alone, I had plenty of opportunity for observation. From the time I left Prince Rupert almost until I reached Port Edward, a distance of nine miles, they say, I was hardly ever out of each other of the blue grouse. Just adjoining the edge of the townsite the first was heard and from that time on they were everywhere. I did not see one, but I knew where they were. They were sitting away up in a spruce or hemlock tree in a bunch close to the trunk and as I heard the soft warbling note, I knew I could see the bird rise, puff out its breast and give its levee call.
Love Calls Compared.
Another rooster in love has been seen in the neighbourhood of every other rooster and there is always then a chance of a fight. His call is a note. Another rooster gets up and cawes back. Pretty soon there are feathers flying.
When the cock blue grouse is in love he sits high up in a tree and in the softest voice possible says: "I have the finest little wife there is in the country." Another male blue grouse in another tree answers: "My wife is the sweetest little thing in the blue grouse world."
After considering this a short time the first grouse hoots softly: "My wife loves me and I love her" and the answer is, "There is no lady blue grouse alive that can compare with mine." The birds never chase each other but they say soft sweet things and that in the softest, love tone imaginable. These were some of the things I heard as I walked to Port Edward.
Other Birds.
Besides the blue grouse I heard wrens singing at several points. On the mud flats in Porpoise Harbor was a crane, a long legged graceful creature, timid because it is always hunted. Just beyond Zenardi as I was watching a hawk, a pebble shot out of a hole away up the steep side of the cut. On the other side of the cut was a kingfisher sitting on a telegraph pole. I knew immediately what it was. The other bird was in that hole digging to make a nest and had thrown out the pebble.
Of course there were other things to be seen. There was a white butterfly that was out rather early and a brown moth that could not fly very well in the bright sunlight. Ducks and grebes were enjoying the sunshine in the water and the glasses made them seem so close that it was like looking at them in a pond close by.

Coffee Was Ready.
There were a lot of other things but it's difficult to remember them all. The walk was one of the most enjoyable I have had for many a day. The alder trees were bursting into leaf, the alder catkins were just at their best and here and there a skunk cabbage was pushing up its yellow hood. There was a seal in the rapids at Zenardi and there were several friends I met en route and two that had some coffee ready just as I came on their camp fire.
If you want a change from the crowded throng of Third Avenue just take a walk out to Port Edward on a Sunday afternoon when the sun is shining and there is just enough cool breeze to make things pleasant. Nothing can equal such a trip.

In the Letter Box

THE IRISH AGAIN
Editor, Daily News—I notice in Friday's paper another letter in answer to mine of Monday. I only used the word "loyalty" because of its brevity, which surely is a virtue in correspondence. The German controlled states that were given self-determination are in a different case to Sinn Fein Ireland. Those same states are not hostile to Britain and they are certainly further away in miles. As I said on Monday, if Sinn Fein Ireland was in the middle of the Atlantic or Pacific, I don't suppose the British Government would hesitate about giving them a republic, and good riddance too, but the same government is not buying a pistol to aim at herself in the future.
Mr. Montgomery says Ireland by eighty per cent decided on a Republic.
Strong Arm Methods
Were there no strong arm methods used at that election? Trust Sinn Fein for that.
Where is there another country on earth whose government would allow any resident to refer to their own troops as a foreign army? Would the United States?

Burnings
"Burning cities and towns, what would Mr. Montgomery and his friends do if the shoe was on the other foot? In other words I suppose he and his like would have the British troops in Ireland calmly sitting in their barracks smoking, etc., while their comrades outside were being shot at from ambush. Nothing doing.
Sinn Fein Responsible
If England and Scotland and Wales has "deprived Ireland of all civil law," it is solely owing to the acts of Sinn Feiners long past.
Home Rule, why the rest of the British Isles would only be too glad if they would accept it. That's the trouble. Sinn Feiners don't want Home Rule, but a republic, which they will never get. As for McSwiney being a martyr, Rats!!
