Lloyd George Urges Churches Not to Interfere in Public Affairs Beyond Their Scope

Speaking in Welsh at a meeting of a Methodist General Assembly at Portmadoc, Lloyd George said that recently there was an important convocation of very highly-placed divines who proceeded forthwith to discuss the coal strike. They expressed an opinion upon the best method of settling the strike. It was not a question which they were in the least competent to discuss. That was an example of an interference by a religious organization in the task of government which, if followed, would be replete with mischief to both Church and State.

Irish Question.
Now he was going to give a perhaps more dangerous illustration, and here he must ask for their forbearance. He alluded to the Irish question. He was going to express no opinion about the wrongs or the rights of that controversy. He was only going to point out what an unfitting subject it was for introduction into the debates of religious conferences.

"A party in Ireland representing two-thirds of the population of that island demand complete severance from the United Kingdom and the setting up of an independent republic in that island close to our shores. At a recent election they have reaffirmed that demand. Every effort I have made publicly and otherwise to secure a modification of that demand has completely failed. They have emphatically stated that they will agree to nothing else. Whether it ought to be conceded or not may be a very proper subject for debate in senates and in political gatherings, but I know you will agree with me that it is certainly not a matter for discussion at a religious conference.

"War on Britain."
In order to establish this republic the Sinn Fein leaders had raised an army and declared war on Great Britain. In the course of that war Great Britain was drawn to defend its position by the use of armed forces. The only alternative was complete surrender. Compromise of any kind the Sinn Feiners had refused even to discuss.

"It is possible that things may have been done even by our forces under the impulse of passion and wrath and fear which one would rather not have happened, but it is very easy for men in the tranquility and—may I also say—the security of the sanctuary to criticize men who are going in hourly peril of their lives, and who whilst walking along the streets or the roads may at any moment witness the stones on their path becoming the blazing messenger of death.

"If they are to be blamed for mistakes they commit, if they are charged with crimes they have not committed, they ought at least to be heard. A religious conference is the last body to condemn such men unheard. Most of them are men who went through the Great War without a stain on their honor. They are entitled to be heard. If they are heard, religious conferences will have their time taken up with debates on questions of fact which are with great difficulty elucidated. The work of the churches will be neglected, and for the decent transaction of the spiritual affairs of the churches will be substituted the cries of prolonged and heated political controversies. That is why I regret the introduction of these subjects."

Temperance.
Dealing with the question of temperance, the Premier said that not only had the churches there a right to interfere directly; it was their imperative duty to exert the whole of their influence to promote the cause of sobriety by every means in their power. They should do so without any regard to the effect which their interference might have upon the fortunes of any or all political parties. Resolutions did not have much effect. Temperance must not be used merely as a partisan weapon.

League of Nations Danger.
Coming to another issue, "the great issue of the gospel of peace on earth and goodwill amongst men," Mr. Lloyd George said here was a task indeed for the churches. "I am all for the League of Nations," he said, "but that is not enough. There is a real danger that unless something more is done to instruct opinion in the civilized countries of the world the League of Nations may become a breeding ground of intrigues and feuds. Parties and groups may be formed there, and one day when the majority is one way and the force another you may find that the discussions of the League of Nations have only led up to the greatest conflict ever yet witnessed."

Conscience of People.
There must be some influence that will deal with the heart of the people; the conscience of the people must be learned so that it shall abhor bloodshed as a crime. Whether the Covenant of the League of Nations is the best organization for the purpose or whether the American proposition is more likely to succeed, I respectfully suggest, is not for the churches to discuss. It is for them to create the atmosphere." (Cheers.)

The same observation applied to industrial warfare. There would be disputes in the future as to wages and conditions of labor and how profits were to be distributed. In these struggles the Christian churches could express no opinion as to the merits without stepping outside their legitimate function and imperiling their greater influence.

DOLLY VARDEN TO SHIP ORE

Three Thousand Tons of Ore on Dump Will Be Removed.

ALICE ARM, July 7.—Work will commence this week shipping to the beach about 3000 tons of ore that is already mined at the Dolly Varden. No work in the mine is contemplated at present.

Preparations are now being made to resume operating the railroad which has been closed down since last winter. The future policy of the Taylor Mining Co. in regard to the operation of the property seems to be as uncertain as ever, no new developments have been announced as a result of the recent visit of the president of the company, A. J. T. Taylor, to England.

WANT LOCAL OPTION IN ALCOHOLIC DRINKS

GENVA, Switzerland, July 7.—Gustave Ador, former president of Switzerland, associated with a number of doctors and professors, has started a movement in favor of local option in the sale of alcoholic beverages, to the exclusion of wines, beer and cider.

The movement has for its object to obtain the right of communities and cantons to vote upon the question separately. The sale of alcoholic drinks is a state monopoly.
