THRIFT AND UNEMPLOYMENT

The Editor, Daily News:—The other day I heard two men, presumably quite interested in the welfare and prosperity of the country, debating on some questions affecting the future of our people. Their physical appearance reminded me of "Mutt and Jeff." "Mutt" was disapproving capitalism in a very emphatic manner, saying: "These millionaire capitalists back East control all the money and we never get a look in." To which "Jeff," apparently, had no rebuttal.

Why the Agitation?
Now, what is the cause of this continual unrest, resulting in much agitation, that seems to follow us around? I believe our present social structure is sound, but something is lacking which makes possible periodical "hard times." That elusive "something" is nothing more than misunderstanding the biggest job that is going on around us day in and day out, which is just "every-day living."

Many of us endeavor to maintain high standards of living. Most of us attempt to make life as inviting, as pleasing and as comfortable as our standards demands. Let us go on. The best factor we have in making the job I mentioned in my last paragraph an indisputed success is THRIFT.

"And what is thrift?" Mr. Mutt will ask. "I'd like to buy a little if it'll do all that fellow Waide says it will."
Thrift is cheap. It does not demand a great amount of effort. In order to become visible in a community it does require that a large majority of the people indulge therein.

What Thrift is.
Thrift does not consist in refusing to spend money or buy things. It consists, under a money economy, in spending money and buying things, but in spending money for things of a different kind from that which thriftlessness buys. Thrift buys things with a relatively vivid appreciation of the future; thriftlessness buys things with a relatively dull or weak appreciation of the future. It very generally, though not exclusively, consists in investing money; that is, in buying income-bearing goods. This may be done directly, as when a farmer buys a tractor or improves his farm as a producing unit.

Thrift regards future need as comparable in importance with present desires; thriftlessness regards present desires as of greater importance than future needs.
Thrift may be practiced indirectly, as when one deposits money in a savings bank, buys an insurance policy or a corporation bond. In all these and many other cases the saver merely turns his money over to other agencies and they do the investigating; that is, they buy the producer's goods or the income-bearing goods with it.

Look to the Future.
It is obvious, is it not, that when a farmer buys a tractor he spends money as truly as when he buys a luxurious automobile, and that the money spent employs as much labor and stimulates business as much in one case as in the other? Temporarily, he has, by so doing, deprived himself of immediate enjoyment. In the long run, however, farmers who undergo this form of deprivation spend more money and have more means of enjoyment, possibly better automobiles, than those thriftless farmers whose standing of living never looks to the future. As a matter of observation, thrifty communities spend more money in the long run than thriftless communities, for the sufficient reason that they have more money to spend. But, even with their larger expenditure, so long as they remain thrifty a larger proportion of their economy is spent for producers' goods than is true in a thriftless community.

In the Community.
And now let us assume our community has become thrifty. There comes a period when work is scarce and, through necessity a number of men voluntarily offer their knowledge and energy—either or both as the case may be—in return for reasonable compensation. If the community as a whole has made a success of the job of living by their application of the big factor Thrift what is the attitude they will take when there is a surplus amount of human energy or knowledge offered? Don't you see, Thrift says it will be a big loss to the future if you do not take advantage of this voluntary desire to work, and, if you follow the dictum of Thrift, future generations will bless you and say: "Those people know that money was a medium for accomplishing great tasks, and that by providing for the future, they have erected a great monument to perpetuate the ideals of a mighty race."
LEONARD WAIDE.

The Man in the Moon SAYS—

THE Comox Argus says: "The Tarvin arrived in Courtenay some time ago but is still in its containers while the grass grows green all around."

We say the rock has been at Smith Island for a thousand years and is still there while the mud gets thicker all the time.

SOME men say they are infallible but we never saw one yet who changed his shoe laces before they busted.

THE census commissioner doesn't need to think he knows the ages of all the girls in Prince Rupert for they didn't tell the truth.

THE latest example of a nuisance is an enumerator coming in during the midst of the morning's rush.

WE are beginning to lose confidence in the promises of a settlement of the coal strike.

SO enthusiastic was Mayor Rochester about giving that "Bsh spezial" a proper send-off on Tuesday morning that he sprained his ankle in the bargain and now old Henry F. is working overtime.
