BRINGING UP FATHER

CANDIDATES SPEAK AT THE OPEN FORUM

to see it. He did not think that good financing.

Business Government.
As far as his lack of experience was concerned, municipal government was nothing but business government. The departmental heads were responsible for the operation and the mayor for the legislation. If the officials could not attend to the operation, then new ones must be put in.

Regarding moral affairs he had lived here since April, 1909, and had lived single and married. He had conducted himself properly both as a single and as a married man. He made no promises but if elected he would deliver the goods.

Ald. Rochester.

"As far as statistics are concerned, Ald. Perry has gone into that fully," said Ald. Rochester, on taking the platform. "Statements have been made here which are not true. The school board say nothing was done when their application for money for the new school was received. We took up the matter with the bond houses, but could not sell bonds to Eastern Canada or United States bond houses."

"To move the pipe line at Hays Cove would have cost $20,000, and we did not feel like entering into that."

Mr. Nickerson quoted Mr. Pejers and saying the citizens had no rights in Cow Bay. That is not right as can be ascertained from the files at the city hall. The rights of the city there are not going to be given away but are going to be respected.

"The council did not agree to the exchange of 250 feet of waterfrontage and would give no promise until a definite agreement was submitted. Some years ago a man had come from Victoria as an emissary from the provincial government and the city had agreed to relinquishing its rights for 400 feet of waterfrontage outside but later we found that the man had no authority to make such an agreement. The city is, however, indebted to that much."

"I am not going to make any excuses for soliciting your votes. I have been here for fourteen years and am familiar to you all. I have served for three years on the council board and have no interests to serve. All I have made here I have put back into the city and I have nothing to regret."

D. McD. Hunter.

D. McD. Hunter said he had been for twenty years in the service of the schools of the province and he did not think he had been well treated here. This was the only place where he had not been dealt with frankly. He had served faithfully throughout the years and now he felt the people here would be behind him. While he differed from some sections of the labor people he was in full sympathy with those who worked, for he had always worked himself. He would try to serve them well and fight in their interests if necessary.

Douglas Sutherland.

D. Sutherland made no promises and did not believe in long manifestoes. If they considered he could represent them he would give of his best and would treat all matters that came before him in a businesslike way. One issue before them was Cow Bay. He was in favor of keeping it open. Any interests that wanted it closed must show that it would be in the interests of the people to close it. He charged that the movement to close it was engineered by selfish interests. The bay, he claimed, was a necessary adjunct to the city. He was in favor of playgrounds for the children and would like to have them where they did not have to climb a mountain to get to them. He was out in support of Harry Rochester for mayor.

George Kerr.

George Kerr, chairman of the board of works for the past year, said he was one of a committee of three of whom Currie had left town and Casey had quit. They had done a good deal of work such as the pipe line across the narrows and Section 2 bridge. He favored keeping Cow Bay open. They might want to bring in the rock for paving that way. In the coming year the Grand Trunk assessment would be a big thing. Power also was a big question. The waterworks was in a better condition than ever, capable of supplying 40,000 people. They had enough water to supply a pulp mill in the city. He advocated the building of an incinerator for the city garbage.

W. H. Murray.

W. H. Murray, said he had been a member of the utilities board and had also been planked on to the board of works. For this Ald. Kerr had not given him credit. He thanked them for electing him on the last occasion and asked for a renewal of their confidence.

C. C. Perry.

C. C. Perry explained that in regard to Cow Bay he kept an open mind. He would keep in view the best interests of the city. As chairman of the utilities committee they had had to deal with the power question. Several projects had been before them including Falls River, estimated cost, $2,500,000; Khatada, $1,500,000; a diesel oil scheme which had been thrown out; steam turbine, $320,000; addition to Shawatlans to generate an additional 1,000 horse power, $268,000, and the Thulme River project estimated cost, $700,000, which would generate 4,000 horsepower. The last mentioned project appealed to the committee strongly. If a company could offer them a cheaper rate, he would favor negotiating with them. He suggested making preliminary surveys at Thulme River at a cost of $20,000. He was in favor of development and progress. It was for the police commission to deal with the moral condition of the city. During the year they had raised the wages of City employees. He asked for support at the coming election.

J. M. Kelly.

J. M. Kelly spoke for himself and Tom Silversides. They were nominees of the G. W. V. A. and stood for a high standard of citizenship. He believed that the power question and the Cow Bay schemes should be decided by the citizens.

It would be his policy to find out what the city needed and then get busy. There was enough industry here today to make this a good city. They wanted permanent streets and buildings. The city had been the last to act in the recent drydock crisis when they should have been the first. They should show that the city was all right by their optimism. He had not much here but he was proud of his little home and would boost for it. He asked that the electors vote for the granting of the building on Third Avenue to the War Veterans, even if they turned down himself and Tom Silversides as candidates.
