ENTHUSIASTIC LIBERAL RALLY IS FORECAST OF VICTORY FOR PARTY AND FOR FRED STORK.

parties of the Government officials who came over the line in special trains, and he said this condition would have to be changed.

In 1917 the voice of Skeena riding had been smothered by illegal methods, continued the speaker. This had reflected itself in the House where there was no one to speak for the constituency and while others were getting shipbuilding contracts none came here until very late. At the time the new vessels were being put into service it would have been easy to have developed business out of Prince Rupert. Now it would take a great deal of energy and time to overcome the loss which had already been sustained.

Toronto Needs Meighen.

Referring to the posters "Canada Needs Meighen" which were displayed around the constituency as part of the election campaign, Mr. Stork said they should read, "Toronto needs Meighen, but Canada needs a change." He denounced the independent camouflage. He urged to that the people of this city remember that when they cast a vote for Stork it was not really a vote for Stork but a ballot for the voter himself. If they believed that the return of Meighen was best for the country, then the thing to do was to support the Meighen candidate; but if on the other hand they believed the Liberal plan was a good one they should vote for Stork. He wanted them to roll up a thousand majority to show Meighen that when he flouted the people here, his action was resented by the people here. They should show Mackenzie King that they are behind him and that the people of the north believe in themselves and in him.

W. H. Montgomery.

The opening address was by W. H. Montgomery who gave two reasons for supporting Fred Stork. In the first place he supported the man who stood for Prince Rupert. The city would never amount to anything under the present Government. The place was brought into existence by the Liberals and the idea was to make the city second to none. The Conservatives had succeeded in keeping it back. He urged that they vote for Fred Stork, not because of his popularity but because of what he represented. The second reason was that of the railway. It would be foolish to try to get the same dose they had been getting during the past few years. It was the duty of every man who had the interest of Prince Rupert at heart to roll up such a majority as would let the Government know the people here were absolutely opposed to such methods as had been in force in the past.

D. Segouin.

Damase Segouin spoke of the campaign of mud slinging on the part of the Government candidate's supporters. Even the Colonel was disgusted with the Empire. He was told at the G.W.V.A. that he should support Colonel Peck because of his stand on the Oriental question but he told the G.W.V.A. men that when the Colonel was running the Georgetown sawmill he had all sorts of Chinese and Japs working for him.

The speaker extolled the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier and told how, after the Tories had built the Intercolonial Railway and left it with its terminus in a potato patch, it was Laurier who came along and brought it into the town of Levis and placed it on a paying basis.

Mr. Segouin was very witty at the expense of the men who were campaigning for Peck. He showed how he had refuted the arguments in favor of Colonel Peck and of the "carrying the banner of Liberalism" by that candidate. He had been told it was a shame to vote against a soldier. Well, he had fought nearly as long as the Colonel overseas. A committee of the Veterans had once asked the Colonel to oppose the Government on its policy but the reply had been that he "had no use for those fellows in opposition." Now he comes around and tells you he is a liberal. "If he was a Liberal why did he not let his name go before the Liberal convention?" He had the opportunity.

Voted Behind Lines.

Mr. Segouin said he voted behind the lines in France and he cast his ballot for Stork. He was forced to vote as the Colonels were the whole thing over there. The Colonels were not the whole shooting match today, however. Prince Rupert had been represented by outsiders from the beginning and now he was told that Colonel Peck had sold out his interests here and was prepared to move away to some big town where there were plenty of colonels with whom he could associate. Colonel Peck went to Victoria and worked for Toftine against a returned soldier because that soldier was a private. His decoration had been won bravely but why use them to elect a colonel? The widows and orphans were scrubbing floors to make a living because of the paltry pensions given them, while the officers were drawing big pensions. He would continue to fight for the widows and orphans and the only hope in doing so was to do it through the Liberal party.

W. E. Williams.

W. E. Williams spoke of the posters of Meighen on the billboards and the immense advertising campaign of the Conservatives and said he had come to the conclusion that the people of Canada including himself, were paying for it. He mentioned the $25,000,000 loan to Roumania without sanction of Parliament and another $25,000,000 to Greece. This money was really paid to the manufacturers of Canada to relieve them of their surplus stocks accumulated at high rates during the war and which was left on their hands. Was it any wonder these same manufacturers were able to finance an immense advertising campaign for the Government. This money he was of opinion would never be paid back.

Contracts to Directors.

Mr. Williams went on to discuss the railway situation. The Liberals had opposed the extending of the C.N.R. to the coast. He discussed railway management and mentioned that the contracts for rolling stock went to firms, the directors of which were also directors of the railway. He gave specific instances of this. It was difficult to make a railway pay when it was being milked in that way. The advertising of tenders was also mentioned. Mr. Williams saying that for small jobs, tenders were advertised but for big work only selected firms were asked to tender.

It was no idle promise of Sir Wilfrid that he would make this a great port. He was doing it when he was defeated in 1911. The only way to insure a continuation of that policy was to vote for the Liberal candidate and make sure that he was returned. Dr. Kerwin also made an excellent speech.
