"Since my return I am in receipt of information that we are to receive a good settlement. This is a source of satisfaction to me and should be to all the creditors."

"In bringing about the satisfactory conclusion, I was treated very fairly. In my interviews with the ministers all showed sympathy for Prince Rupert and the creditors in particular. Mr. Ballantyne advised me before I left that the Government had decided to do something for us."

"In particular the creditors may thank Col. Peck for his efforts in this matter. I want to say that in my opinion there is no man in British Columbia who could have done more had he represented us. Ald. Perry, in asking for the grant, explained that the city was coming up against the problem of providing more power for local demands. It had been found on examination that it would be impossible to supply the proposed Emerson mill with the water that it had asked for and the company would be prepared to buy power from the city now.

It was the consensus of opinion of the council board that it would be just as well to ascertain right now if the Thulme River project was a feasible one so the vote was made for the cruising of the line and the sounding of the dam site.
