BRINGING UP FATHER

ROTARY CLUB GIVES BANQUET

Delegates From Seattle and Vancouver Give Interesting Addresses.

INTERNATIONAL AMITY URGED BY VISITOR

"I bring you a greeting from all Rotarians whether living in the United States under the Stars and Stripes or from those who live and serve under the Union Jack," said John Roberts, special representative of the district Governor of the Rotary Clubs of the West, at a banquet tendered himself and Bob Miller, vice-president of the Vancouver club, at the St. Regis private dining room Saturday night.

"Before the war there was between the two countries often the brutal frankness of relatives. Now they stand together for world service. There is five thousand miles of international boundary line where vital interest meets vital interest and yet there is no fortress, battleship or sentinel. It is a line of international peace. With the two great democracies, the British and the American lies the future of the world and Rotary can do much to cement international amity."

Indefinable.
No one could define Rotary, continued the speaker. It had been humorously defined as the inward inexpressiveness of outward aliveness. It was impossible to formulate. It was an expression of the better self and it was impossible to measure it with a yardstick. Outdoors it was thought it was of selfish origin for the purpose of promoting the business interests of its members, but if it did this, it was only through the associations the members formed, the friendships and cordial relationships. He urged the members to be live wires and make the club a factor in the community. The members could not expect to take out of Rotary more than they put in, the motto "He profits most who serves best" being always true.

Work in Seattle.
Mr. Roberts told of the work Rotarians had done in Seattle where they had recently raised $25,000 for an orthopaedic hospital for crippled children.

At one time, said Mr. Roberts, the question asked of a man was "what has he got?" Later, the question usually asked, "where did he get it?" Now the main interest in the possession of wealth was "what is he doing with it?"

Mr. Roberts explained that the work of Rotary was not all serious. It was not necessary to be petrified in order to be dignified. Happiness and good fellowship should always be radiated.

"You can depend on the people of America to the fullest extent in all good works," concluded the speaker. "Acting together the great Empire and the great Republic will work to save themselves and the world. That is the spirit of Rotary."

On behalf of the District Governor, Mr. Roberts then presented the charter to the club and President Doby received it. In doing so Mr. Doby said the local members appreciated the fact that they were a link in the chain of clubs and he felt sure the local club would be a factor in the affairs of the community. He thanked the visitors for coming and asked them to carry with them hearty thanks for their interest.

Numerous Toasts.
Addresses were given by Tom Miller, Dr. Kergin, T. H. Johnson, Mayor Rochester and W. E. Williams. Mr. Johnson in proposing a toast to the president after "The King" had been drunk in silence, spoke of the cordial relationships existing between the countries and the hope that Rotary would further cement that friendship.

Mayor Rochester welcomed the visitors to the city.

W. E. Williams proposed a toast to the visitors to which Mr. Miller responded.

Fred Stork.
Fred Stork in proposing "The City We Live In," said he took a great deal of pride in this little city of the west where conditions were better than in any other and where the people were happy and contented. The city was in a healthy condition financially.

Mr. Stork then spoke of the advantageous position of the city in relation to other ports. Those who came here to live did so after mature consideration. The location on the map was the great thing. He believed the city was on the eve of greater things. He told of the frantic efforts made by railroads to the south to get the Oriental silk business. This city had all the advantages of transportation. She could afford to smile at the demonstration of effort. Here there was a flat track, a good grade and 500 miles advantage in distance. She had a strategic position. We should yet see this city second to none on the coast and Rotary could take a great part in that development.

Dr. Kergin said they all realized the world was in a state of flux. The world was changing so rapidly that no one could estimate what would take place in a few years. Old institutions were losing their force. With these changes in process, he felt Rotary could fill a great need. While the world was millions of years old, yet we were only in the morning of history. As a link in the great chain, the club should become a great force for peace and for everything making for betterment. He urged the members to develop the spirit of service.

FEW VERSES DEALING WITH SPORTS OR GAMES

Most of Those Submitted Have to Do with Boating or Swimming.

Any phase of outdoor life may be dealt with in the verses in the competition now running. It may have to do with sports or games, with camp life, with tramping or travelling or with mountain climbing as well as with swimming or boating. Some of the rather clever verses submitted so far will make judging difficult, but we probably have not yet exhausted the efforts of contributors. The competition will continue for some days yet.
