

easy to wear
—hard to wear out

HURLBUT cushion sole SHOES give the child a free natural step—they prevent that shuffling shambling walk you see in so many children. The uppers are made to stand the hundred different strains of play-time, the soles are high grade leather that stands up to the hardest wear. This is why HURLBUTS are the most economical—they last longer.

The soft cushion insole—free from ridges or lumps, the broad nature-shape toe, help the child's foot to develop as nature intended and prevent trouble in later years. The shoes are wetted and insure the lowest cost per day of wear.

BRITISH GOLF CHAMP BEATEN

DEAL, N. J., Oct. 6.—Miss Cecil Leitch, the woman golf champion of Britain, France and Canada, failed in her quest for the United States championship. She was defeated by Mrs. F. C. Letts, Jr., of Chicago, one up on the home green thus being eliminated from the tournament.

ALASKAN REGULATIONS FOR TRAPPING SEASON

Ban on Beaver and Marten Lifted by Bureau of Biological Survey.

JUNEAU, Oct. 6.—A complete new set of regulations for the protection of land fur-bearing animals in Alaska issued recently by the Bureau of Biological Survey, which became effective September 1, have just been made public. These regulations contain the restoration of open seasons for trapping beaver and marten, which was recently announced by Mr. Walker.

In Southeastern Alaska the open season on beaver extends from December 1 to March 31. The season for trapping marten in Southeastern Alaska opens on November 16 instead of November 6, as was stated previously, and closes on March 31.

May Be Temporary

There has been no open season for killing beavers since 1919 and none for martens since 1916. Prior to the time when closed seasons were established on these valuable fur-bearers the animals were reported as being rapidly exterminated. In announcing restoration of open seasons, the Bureau of Biological Survey stated that it had been conducting investigations for the past year with a view of again permitting the killing of beaver and marten where practicable. These investigations have shown that while in some few districts beavers and martens are still scarce, in many others they have increased to the extent that no harm will result in allowing them to be killed during at least one season. If, after one season's trapping, it is found that these valuable fur-bearers cannot maintain proper numbers, the matter of again providing a close season the year round will be considered.

Sport Chat

The prospects for senior basketball in the city this winter are not very promising if Tuesday night's annual meeting may be taken as any indication. It was made known then that two clubs, the Sons of Canada and the Elks, had already obtained the most of the best players in the city and had left other organizations without material good enough to pit against them. This is a regrettable feature, indeed, and one that should be remedied at once unless these two organizations are to be the only ones to play senior basketball this winter. It is possible that some of the players may yet be released for other clubs and there will possibly be another meeting for reorganization.

A suggestion that has been made by W. E. Whillier, the new president of the association, and one that has proved interesting and successful in other places is that the names of all prospective senior players be placed in a hat at another meeting and that new lineups be made for the winter, the number of players governing the number of clubs. Then the league could be formed and the schedules of games arranged. It would be an innovation here but one that might have its good points.

The rounding up of all the players by the Sons of Canada and the Elks has just been a manifestation of club spirit. It has always existed here in a large degree and is not to be condemned. In a place the size of Prince Rupert, however, the result is not always the best for there is not a great deal of material to choose from. It might be just as well to forget it and line up players in some other way so that there may be more than two aggregations who can offer each other good competition and make interesting games. It may be a difficult matter to overcome the club spirit, however, for the Sons of Canada are proud of their past achievements and want to attain more. The Elks, on the other hand, are confident that if given the privilege of using any material in their membership, they can stop the Sons. Neither are to be blamed for feeling that way.

Despite the situation as far as the seniors are concerned, it looks as if there will be as many ladies', intermediate and junior clubs in the field as ever this season. Various organizations have been getting in line and a good deal of enthusiasm has been worked up. With this condition, it is likely that all that is lost in the Senior League may be made up for by greater efforts among the other leagues. With the closing of entries for the leagues on October 15 it will be possible to ascertain more definitely what is in sight.

OLD MAN ABANDONED BY HIS FOUR SONS

Vancouver Society Threatens Exposure Unless He is Supported.

VANCOUVER, Oct. 5.—"I am an outcast, aged and abandoned by my four sons who all have plenty." This is the amazing story told to the Vancouver Society for the Relief of the Worthy Poor by a venerable man whose name has been withheld, pending action by the sons. They have been informed that their names will be published in display, at the expense of the society, unless they take care of their father.

The old gentleman claims he educated his boys and gave them a good start. One is a local tradesman, it is stated. Secretary Lind-Mason, of the society, states the sons explained their heartless conduct by claiming their father, who is 76, is eccentric and wanders from home at times.

PREDICTION OF IMPROVEMENT

Banker Thinks Countries of Europe Will Be Rehabilitated.

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 6.—Hope of Europe's complete economic reconstruction, judged by the lessons of history, was expressed here today by Alexander D. Noyes, financial editor of the New York Times, in an address before the convention of the American Bankers' Association. The judgments of financiers and other business men who have been predicting "a ruined Europe," or a "bankrupt world," he said, were distorted and not only misread economic history but misunderstood "the human element in economic progress and ignored certain facts in European finance of this very year."

Economic Progress.

"The country and its banking interests know now, and very much to their cost," said Mr. Noyes, "how completely the whole situation was misjudged in 1919, an illusion based on the assumption that there was not limit to the rise of prices and that an enormously increased trade with Europe, Asia and South America could be continued indefinitely on the basis of those and of a preposterous inflation of credit at American banks. But if the business community was totally wrong in its view of the world's outlook when every one was optimistic two years ago, how can we be sure that the almost unqualified pessimism that has prevailed more recently has any better justification?" The speaker said such ill-judgment is characterized by absence both of historical perspective and insight into the forces which make for economic progress.

Notorious Sinners.

Despite the fact that Germany and Austria have been "notorious sinners" in their unprecedented paper currency inflation, indicating apparent economic chaos, the speaker pointed out that the United States, France and other countries had passed through similar post-war experiences and had recovered.

"It is a strange perversion which has blinded so many people to the fact that these very states of ours, now in the American union," declared the speaker, "were almost the first of all to try the paper experiment of Germany and Poland and to repudiate the paper when it had sunk to nothing. We know their subsequent history under the sound money and the sound government of the American constitution. The 40,000,000,000 francs of paper money issued by revolutionary France was entirely repudiated, yet France under the sound-money government of Napoleon, less than 10 years afterward became the most powerful and prosperous nation of Europe. The real wealth of a nation lies in its natural resources and the energy of its people. A nation can not be economically ruined so long as it continues to possess these resources but the facts do not prove that a government can resort to repudiation without forfeiting its rights to govern and they do not in the least set a pattern whose imitation great European nations such as England, France and Italy could consider."

Britain's Recovery.

A very notable change in 1921, Mr. Noyes said was when England took the first steps to gain control of its war-time currency notes. The minimum of $368,200,000 outstanding in December, 1920, he declared, had been reduced to $316,000,000 or nearly 15 percent. The paper money issues of the Bank of France which in November, 1920 were 39,600,000,000 francs had been reduced 2,500,000,000 francs within 10 months. Considering how gradual the process of currency contraction always had been in the past, the speaker expressed the opinion that it is "a very remarkable achievement."

sponge were passed over the paper obligations of revolutionary Russia—nominally valued now, I believe, in trillions—and if the present group of fanatics at Moscow were replaced by a sane and intelligent government, Russia would not be one of the great economic powers of the modern world."

Readjustment.

Mr. Noyes said that the vital question today is "the readjustment, the rehabilitation and the economic reconstruction of those half dozen European nations on whom fell the full shock and strain of four years conflict." He said that no more difficult and baffling problem has been presented in at least a century but that the restoration of national credit, the resumption of gold payments and the bringing of international exchange to a normal basis are possible of achievement. Judged by experience of the past, he was confident a correct solution would be found.

MISSING DOG BACK.

VANCOUVER, Oct. 5.—Familiar wails awakened Mr. and Mrs. Thomas McCoy, old residents, one night this week, and investigation proved that their old family dog "Gyp" was outside, after an absence of one year. He was covered with burrs and other evidence of being back to nature for a long time.
