CAPT. DANCEY AT CHAUTAUQUA

Gives Interesting Lecture in Empress Theatre Last Night on "The Invisible Frontier."

"I can understand a man who would rob or steal but I cannot understand a man who will take everything a community or country has to offer and then stab that community or country in the back," declared the lecturer at the Chautauqua last last night, Capt. Stanley N. Dancey.

Capt. Dancey is a wonderfully fluent speaker. He speaks very fast, so fast that sometimes it is difficult to follow him. He has a wealth of incident and a fund of humor which he draws upon constantly and he keeps his audience interested all the time. An Irishman by parentage and a Canadian by birth he still has a little of the Irish brogue, just sufficient to make his voice pleasant. His subject, "The Invisible Frontier," has to do with the invisible line between Canada and the United States but even in the lecture it is seldom seen. In order to illustrate his points the speaker draws on his experiences as a lecturer in the United States where he says he has spoken to upwards of two million people, having addressed 1200 meetings.

Loyal to Community.

Captain Dancey urged loyalty to the country and also loyalty to the community in which we lived. In this way a community spirit could be built up. In every community there were people who passed the buck and refused to think of anything but the almighty dollar. These people were not of much use to the community. There had to be a spirit of unselfishness, a spirit of loyalty and of self sacrifice in order to get the best out of life. Canada asked that the people who live here shall be good Canadians who would not try to destroy Canadian institutions.

Captain Dancey said he believed in the people. He always had done so and always would. If they had things explained to them they could be depended on to do the right thing. His work had consisted in trying to remove misunderstandings between different members of the English speaking world and he found the people of the United States very sympathetic and in perfect accord with himself in wishing for world peace. He had spoken to clubs and societies and schools. He found that the feeling toward Great Britain was wonderfully changed since the war, and from the school histories the objectionable statements in regard to the British had been expunged. The difficulty there as here was that so many of the children left school before entering high school and they went out into the world under a handicap. It was the almighty dollar that took them away. In the period from twelve to sixteen years a boy or girl could learn more than in all the rest of the school period, yet many were denied that privilege. What was wanted was an educated people on both sides of the line. If citizenship meant bleeding all you could from people, it was time to close up. There should be nothing less than 100 per cent Canadianism and then Bolshevism would be destroyed. Canada needed patriotism today more than ever before in her history. There was a bigger battle to win in peace than in war.

Morals of Community.

Captain Dancey told of cases of neglect for returned men, both in United States and Canada. The morale of the nation was not good. It was necessary to build up that morale and the way to do it was to start right in Prince Rupert. There was nothing to worry about, but it was necessary to have confidence in ourselves and in the future. It was desirable to have confidence in the leaders of the community, in the churches and schools and other institutions.

Efficiency was necessary in order to secure success, said the speaker. There must be an honest day's labor for an honest day's pay.

Co-operation was essential in any undertaking. Lack of proper co-operation had prolonged the war two years and cost millions of lives. Even in Prince Rupert there could be no success without co-operation. Co-operation between the United States and Canada was desirable. In order that co-operation might be brought about we should know more of each other. The both countries were made up of people of many nationalities but they were all learning to be good Canadians or good Americans. He could not understand a person who took advantage of our free institutions and yet was in sympathy with the enemies of the country. A person living here must accept the responsibilities of citizenship as well as the privileges. There was nothing wrong with British or Canadian ideals, it was only with the people who were trying to put those ideals into practice. If the invisible frontier were carried into other phases of life it would be better for the world.

The Man in the Moon SAYS:-

THERE are always kickers in every community. The latest kick is against short sermons. No sooner does a man get settled in his nap than he is awakened by the singing of the last hymn.
