Coal Strike is The Big Question.

The struggle between the coal miners and the operators of the mines in the Old Country is the one supreme interest today. It overshadows Ireland, which is continually in the limelight. It is one stage in the big struggle between capital and labor in which labor is striving to get what it considers is its due and capital is either clinging to its old time privileges or in some cases is fighting for its very existence.

At this distance it is difficult to tell much about the right and wrong of the question at issue. Locally people line up according to their interests. As a rule labor men sympathize with the efforts of British labor and employers sympathize with the British employers. The matter of right or wrong is left for the people on the spot to settle.

As a labor dispute the present is a very important one, but it is more than that. The present British Government is beset with difficulties. In the first place there is an effort being made to force Germany to live up to the terms of the Peace Treaty and that country is taking advantage of the home difficulties of Britain and other countries to evade its responsibilities. In Ireland too there is trouble and the influence both of Ireland and Germany is used to stir up strife in the British coal fields and keep the spirit of unrest alive.

Miners Foolish in Destroying Mines.

In most of the coal fields, efforts were made by the miners to destroy the mines by allowing them to be flooded. The pumpmen went on strike but many of them returned. Then efforts were made to induce them all to leave the pumps and let the water do its work.

This constituted a deliberate attempt at "sabotage" as the French call it. It looks foolish to us, for if successful it would mean that Britain would be almost obliterated as a coal producing country and without her coal she ceases to exist commercially. Then if the miners should be successful, most of them would have to leave the country in order to secure a livelihood. Destroy Britain's commercial supremacy and half the population would have to emigrate.

Labor Solidarity Being Exemplified.

There is a lot of talk in labor circles about the solidarity of labor. That there is a strong tendency in this direction is shown by the action of the transport workers in deciding to join the miners in the present struggle. Labor is getting together in Britain and it would not be an unlikely possibility to see a labor government in that country in the near future. How radical such a government would be remains to be proved. In Australia they had a labor government years ago, but at that time socialistic thought was not so common as it is today. Social experiments have to be tried before the people will settle down again under any form of government. Whether they will be tried in Britain remains to be seen. Those of us who live at a distance where the government is more stable owing to the greater opportunities for individual activities, will watch with great interest the developments of the next few years. Much will depend upon what happens in Britain for that country has led the way for centuries in advanced legislation, which has been copied by other countries. In that country the population is largely industrial. Education has been free and compulsory for many years so that there is practically no intensely illiterate element to deal with. The workers can all read and write and have had some training in thinking for themselves. The future is full of possibilities.

The time used in Pacific Standard, for the 126th Meridian west. It is counted from 0 to 24 hours from midnight to midnight.

The table given is for Port Simpson but the time for Prince Rupert varies only a few minutes on some days and on others is the same. The range of the tide may be computed as 5 per cent greater at Prince Rupert than at Port Simpson both at springs and neaps. Therefore the rise in the Prince Rupert harbor is slightly greater than Port Simpson.

CANADIAN IS NOT INSANE

Appeal Against Conviction on Murder Charge Dismissed by Judge

A Canadian soldier, Charles Tellett, applied to the Court of Criminal Appeal—Mr. Justice Darling, Mr. Justice Coleridge and Mr. Justice Shearman—for leave to appeal against his conviction of the murder of his sister-in-law and for leave to call further evidence, says the London Times.

The execution was fixed for March 1, but on the receipt of representations from the Canadian Government it was postponed. The feeling was so strong among men who had served with Tellett in France with the Canadian Contingent, that he was not responsible for his actions, that the Canadian Government instructed Sir Charles Russell to act in the matter.

Counsel for Tellett said that the real defence, namely that of insanity, had not been raised at the trial because nobody was acquainted with the evidence which might have been called. Since the death sentence was announced in the newspapers a large quantity of evidence became available from Woolwich Arsenal. There were also witnesses in Canada who could give cogent evidence that Tellett, owing to shrapnel wounds received at the first Battle of Ypres, had never afterwards been responsible for his actions. The evidence collected in Canada was contained in telegrams from the Attorney-General, the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister of the Dominion.

Tellett went with the 3rd Canadian Overseas Battalion to France. He was hit in the head at Ypres, but he recovered, and then he fought at Festubert and Givenchy. At both places he was knocked over by a shell and buried. He was invalided, but later he joined the 216th Battalion and in 1916, when he was a dispatch rider, he was blown over by a shell. Recovering from concussion he was placed with a transport with which he was serving when he was blown into a shell-hole and a large box in the wazon fell on his head.

Home Secretary

Mr. Justice Darling, in delivering the judgment of the Court, said there was no evidence given at the trial which would indicate that Tellett was insane. He had been drinking a good deal and had used threats to the woman whom he killed. Evidence had since been obtained which tended to show that Tellett was insane two years before the commission of the crime. The Court thought it best to refuse the application and to leave the case to be dealt with by the Home Secretary, who could act more freely and more in the interests of the prisoner.

LOWER CAR FARES FOR WORKMEN AND WINNIPEG CHILDREN

WINNIPEG, April 6.—Lower street car fares for workmen and children will most likely be put into force some time this week.

These lower fares have been offered by the Winnipeg Electric Railway Company as concessions precedent to the opening of negotiations between the company and the city to settle outstanding differences and end expensive litigation.

Important developments in connection with proposed negotiations have transpired during the past two days.
