SAVAGE HUSKIES OF NORTH

G. H. French, District Manager for British Columbia of the Hudson's Bay Company, tells of the way they are trained and how an Indian woman fought a pack and was killed protecting her child.

The dogs used in the far North by the Hudson's Bay Company for handling their transport are known as "huskies." They are of a low-set, wide-chested, curled-tail, and sharp, pointed-ears type and naturally wild and ferocious.

During the summer when not used they are kept in corrals made by standing logs on end in a circle. They are fed blubber from the whale or other meat that may be in abundance in whatever part of the North they may be located.

By the fall of each year these dogs become like caged tigers, because they are never liberated from the corral nor do human beings ever venture into their pens. Their food is merely thrown over the top of the corral to them.

When the snow comes and it is time to subdue the dogs so that they can be harnessed and worked, a whip is made by sewing a piece of deer skin in a sack shape about three feet long, tapered at one end. This sack is filled with perhaps two pounds of shot, then long thin strips of buckskin are plaited around the already manufactured heart until there is completed a plaited whip lash of perhaps four feet long. This is attached to a handle not more than one foot long, and is now a weapon that will, when handled by an expert, make a noticeable dent in a plank every time the plank is struck. The dog is never hit with the body of the lash, but the blow is struck in such a way that only the end of the lash hits and that with a sharp crack louder than the crack of a pistol. While these whips are capable of stunning a dog, it is the loud crack that is depended upon principally to subdue them. So frightened of the lash do they become that when the trainer or driver enters the corral to harness them they howl with fear and are harnessed before they realize just what has happened.

Tire Them Out.

Now the door of the corral is opened and out goes the whole pack, hitched to a sleigh, with the driver holding on tight, and continually cracking his whip thereby causing the dogs to race at top speed until they are completely tired out. No other training is necessary. They are now ready for the winter's work. In most Indian camps the women get the wood, snare the rabbits and do most all work of this kind, while the men trap and hunt larger game. One day early in the fall, about thirty years ago, when the snow was already deep on the ground, but before the dogs had been subdued, they had eaten through some of the logs of their corral and got out. The first trail they struck was one made by an Indian woman who had gone out to look at her rabbit snares. This woman had her baby tied up in its cradle on her back, and her only defensive weapon was a small axe.

Baying of Pack.

Presently she heard the baying of the dogs and at once realized what had happened and that she would have to fight for her life. Mother-like, her first thought was for her child, which she unslung from her back and hung up in a tree, high enough so that the dogs could not reach it.

On came the dogs and the wonder is why she never thought of climbing a tree herself, but the evidence went to show that she merely took steps to save her child and prepared herself to fight the dogs with her short-handled axe. It is necessary to really see these dogs to realize just how ferocious they become. I have seen timber wolves in bands, but never do they exhibit the same ferocity as do a pack of wild "huskies." This Indian woman fought them without apparent fear, and when she was found dead, torn in a fearful way, there were three dead dogs and two badly wounded one to show she had fought heroically for her child.

INTELLIGENCE TESTS IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Experiment Being Tried at New York on High School Pupils.

NEW YORK, Sept. 24.—Intelligence tests, adapted from the army, were tried as an experiment when New York's army of 900,000 school children registered for the opening of school this fall. The department of education decided it would be unwise at present to accept the results obtained as a substitute for the teacher's judgment.

The principal aim of the tests was to devise a better classification of pupils. The theory was advanced that by keeping the brighter pupils together they would be able to progress more rapidly, while the average pupil also would be able to make normal progress. The dull students, under the theory, would be given instructions suited to their abilities.

The verbal tests were devised to test arithmetical reasoning, sentence completion, logical selection of words in sentences, general information, vocabulary, analogies and comparisons.

While a complete report has not yet been made of the results, the tests in some schools showed a considerable number of high school pupils whose mental age was below that of the normal pupil. Many of the low-scoring students showed that they had been advanced through the grades too rapidly.

IS PRIZE MEAN MAN!

VANCOUVER, Sept. 24.—While Mrs. Fred J. Bush, wife of a returned soldier, was in a dentist's office, and bore her baby with her, somebody stole the baby's go-cart outside. It was found later at a junk shop where it had been sold by a stranger for $1.25. The police are keeping an eye upon suspicious sales to certain second hand stores in town.
