SCHOOL TEACHERS GIVE IMPRESSIONS OF OLD COUNTRY

OTTAWA, Aug. 26.—Four Ottawa school teachers have just returned from a teaching visit to the old land.

One of the ladies was much impressed with London, its immensity, and its various historical haunts; another found it much as she had expected from so much she had read of it.

Without committing themselves too definitely off-hand, the ladies remarked that they found teaching over there different from Ottawa. The kind of children they had to handle impressed them, seeming to be mostly from the slum areas. Miss Burns said she taught in twelve different schools while over there, some of them near the East India Docks, and in the famous Whitechapel area. They much preferred Ottawa children.

Discipline Different.

The discipline was rather different, and the "cane" seemed rather more in evidence over there. There was not the same spirit of friendliness and confidence between teachers and pupils in the London schools, according to Miss Mina Burns. This lady also commented on the splendid history lessons given during the forty-five minutes devoted each day to Scripture teaching. She said that the Bible was taught as history, and she found no tendency to introduce doctrinal teaching.

Speaking of her travels, Miss Burns said they had a most cordial reception while in Ireland, though excitement there was running high over political events at the time.

FEARLESS ADDRESS TO CANADIAN CLUB

good Briton because the bad Briton was so engrossing.

Rev. Mr. Gough said he had for 22 years preached universal military service from his pulpit at Brompton and while he had lost members of his congregation through doing so, others had come, and in greater numbers.

Ireland the Ulcer.

Ireland was the ulcer in the side of Britain, during the war the speaker said. She would have been less injurious if openly belligerent. Several army corps had to be kept there in order to prevent rebellion and to head off any movement. Just now Britain was a distressful nation with an uncomfortable neighbor. His plan for dealing with the south of Ireland would be to say: "You are not suitable for membership in the British Empire."

God gave the south of Ireland great opportunities to serve the empire and humanity but instead of that she went back to the old black grudges and took German gold and burst into rebellion. If conscription had been enforced he believed Ireland would have found a more happy place in the Empire. The method to deal with her now was either to put in an army and subdue her with military triumphs or tell her to go her own way for she was not bone of our bone. The spirit of de Valera, the Spaniard, was not with us. American, Canadian, South African and Australian were more akin with us than Ireland. He and his alike were no kin with the Anglo-Saxon, the Canadian or the New Zealander.

Could Not Exist.

Of what importance would Southern Ireland be without the Empire, asked the speaker. That part of the country could not exist as a nation by herself. She has neither coal nor iron nor timber. There were present some of the elements which could make of her a solid nation. In the middle ages she had consisted of a number of contending states and tribes and the spirit which animates them now makes for grievances, not for solidarity. There was no element which made for a contented people. "To such I would say, Go. Get from without the folds of the British Jack." The greatness of the Sinn Fein had been because of the Union Jack which lent him importance in the eyes of the world. We of the British Empire have too much to do to deal with a protesting member as she has proved to be.

"Before our race there shines a future greater than the great past, and we cannot be distracted with the fretting Sinn Fein. We shall draw close to the Dominions which are flesh of our flesh and of one heart."

Labor Movement.

Prebendary Gough then spoke of the labor movement in Great Britain. He said there were two voices. There was the voice represented by Neil McLeh and the other represented by Peter Wright of the seamen's union. The latter was a splendid man but he had said that the heart and soul of the British labor movement in Britain was sound. In that he was mistaken. It was not sound. It was rotten to the core. Labor was sound by the movement was not. The movement was conducted by middle class intellectuals. It had not been sound during the war or since.

Labor on the Clyde had been rotten, saturated with treason and at other places they had been helping the German forces. He told of the strikes that had been brought on at the bidding of the Germans and of the valuable time lost during the war which had cost Britain and the other allies valuable lives. The heart and soul of a movement like that was not sound but rotten to the core.

Prebendary Gough told of the resolution that had been passed demanding that negotiations for peace be opened. The men who said this was sound was no friend of the Empire. He urged that the good citizens of the Empire band themselves together against such things as these. He then closed with the words of cheer which declared that the real heart of labor was sound, that Britain would win through as she had won through in the past and that the sunrise of victory was in sight.
