WOMAN'S TASK HOME MAKING

Chautauqua Lecturer Says This Is Most Important Duty of Her Life.

Miss Lethe Coleman, a clever young speaker with a distinct message, was the lecturer at Chautauqua last evening. Miss Coleman's subject was "The Homing of the People" which was mainly directed to mothers as the central figure in the home. While Miss Coleman urged the greater participation of women in affairs outside of the home, she did not advocate this merely as women's rights but from a broader and better standpoint—that she might be able to make her home better through a closer contact with outside affairs, so that she might understand the interests and problems of her family. Many said that now women had the vote they would clean up governments and politics but this was not the speaker's view. If men had made governments and politics dirty then let men clean them up. She brought home her points forcibly illustrating them with many beautiful and striking natural similes.

Changing Times.
"We are living in the swift-changing times in all history," declared Miss Coleman. "Even the homes are changing and woman cannot stand still when all about her is going ahead. She should take up the rights and duties of citizenship but, in doing so, should not lose her womanhood. It should have nothing to do with her divine gift and her physical being. Through having the vote she would have a great power in uplifting politics and public morality."

The time for stupid and incapable women was past and in future they would have to be useful and capable. Their basic education and training should prepare them for motherhood, home making and citizenship, all else being secondary to these three faculties. She should participate in outside activities so that she would be able to advise her children wisely and judiciously on the matters which concerned them. She should know what her boys and girls were doing. She will pass into this new state and cease to be a drudge and slave. She is the homemaker and the home is the foundation upon which the nation raises its superstructure.

Woman's Work.
If she was asked what woman's work was, Miss Coleman would say that it was anything that concerns little children. Through them she also had her greatest suffering and greatest sorrow but through them she also had her greatest joy. The homing instinct was the highest law of womanhood but the modern world did not recognize it and honor it. That was why ninety-five percent of the young women in United States and Canada were seeking professional careers, today. It was natural that woman desired to obtain the laurel of success and it was in business and professions that this was now measured. Little honor was given to the successful mother.

Hard to Train Children.
Western Canada was the last great home of the people and the little children were the future men and women. They would rule the future destiny of the nation and were the heart of the world. Thus in welding these young careers she played her great part in the nation's upbuilding. As the old Irish woman had said it was harder and more important to train children than to produce them. If the domestic life of a nation failed, then that nation would surely fail. If energetic, intelligent and enthusiastic men and women made the homes and inspired the ideals, then the children would be fine, clean and intelligent. The children should be taught to think of the future. If men and women thought of the future and the little children that they hoped some day might be theirs, it would be impossible for them to think the unclean thought, do the unclean deed. Too many people nowadays in seeking the spectacular and the phenomenal and in the mad rush for wealth trod over and left unnoticed the finer things of life.

Spirit, Not Furniture.
The spirit and not the furniture made the ideal homes. The people should go forward resolved to be better home makers. It was up to the mothers to do this and the world would be saved if the hearts of all men and women were enshrined in the love and confidence in their mothers. Women will come forward and before this love and confidence of men in their mothers will fall the tyranny and greed of the world, and permanent peace shall be made from the fighting of the men.

Mr. and Mrs. De Jen also took part in last night's Chautauqua program. The magical illusions of the former was highly entertaining and mystifying and the singing and playing of the latter was delightful. Last night's performance was their last appearance here.

PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION IS AGAIN BROUGHT INTO LIGHT

PORT ALBERNI, Sept. 1.—A revival of the provincial public utilities commission to regulate matters at issue between municipalities and the public utilities was urged upon the municipal convention yesterday by F. A. McDiarmid, parliamentary agent of the Union of B. C. Municipalities and formerly city solicitor for Victoria.

President Jack Loutet urged the provision of an adequate fund for the union of municipalities to protect the interests of municipalities in disputes between utility corporations and municipalities.

ED GILLINGHAM WED YESTERDAY

Arrived in City with Bride Last Evening—Going to Stewart and Swamp Point.

Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Gillingham, who were married yesterday morning in Anyox, arrived in the city last night on their honeymoon. Tomorrow evening they will leave for Stewart and Anyox where three weeks will be spent. Mrs. Gillingham was formerly Miss Lucille Davis. The groom is especially well known here, having lived in the city in the early days when he was employed in George D. Tite's furniture store as bookkeeper. Many friends are extending congratulations to the couple.
