Millionaire Reporter in Garb of Picturesque Fisherman Steps in to Hear John Oliver's Speech

ALBERNI, Sept. 3.—Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., scion of one of America's wealthiest families, motored in here yesterday from his summer home at Sproat Lake to do the family shopping, and stayed to hear Hon. John Oliver address the Union of Municipalities convention.

The visiting delegates were amused to behold the spectacle of an anxious looking young man attired in oilskin overalls represented as the advance fall styles for the west coast fishermen, superimposed by a raincoat and wearing a pair of enormous rubber boots. As a crowning glory a red bandana handkerchief covered his head.

"I owe the butcher $3.75," said the millionaire reporter, as he stepped from the Packard in front of the hotel, "guess I had better visit the bank, draw some money and settle up. I haven't been here long enough to establish good credit."

Without explaining the reason for his high headgear, young Vanderbilt explained that the boots were necessary on account of the bad roads to Sproat Lake where his car became mired frequently in transit.
