AFTERMATH OF WITLEY RIOTS

Argument that High Prices Justified Soldiers in Rioting

GUILDFORD, Surrey, England, Mar. 8.—An echo of the Witley riots was heard in the King's Bench Division of the Law Courts when a commission was authorized by Mr. Justice Coleridge to proceed to Ottawa for the purpose of taking evidence in connection with an action brought against the Surrey County Council for damages sustained by six storekeepers of "Tin Town" at the time of the Canadian military riots in 1918-19. The claimants are not satisfied with the compensation made by the Canadian authorities.

Sir Richard Muir appeared on behalf of the Surrey County Council, and explained that the application for a commission arose through an action, or series of actions, brought against the council by the tenants of shanties called "Tin Town," which were annexed to one of the Canadian military camps at Witley.

Damage to Buildings

On Armistice Day, November 11, 1918, there was a riot of Canadian soldiers in the camp, he said, and damage was done to some buildings. Therefore, the occupants of the shops, apart from several other considerations, had the warning of the risks they were running in keeping shops and goods there. In February, 1919, there was a further riot, Sir Richard continued, and further damage to shops and contents was done, and there was a third riot, with more damage, in June, 1919.

The Camp was one which was governed entirely by the military, he said. The civilian police had no jurisdiction there at all, and were not allowed in the camp.

The military police and officers were quite unable to cope with the soldiers, he said, who took it into their heads to riot. The occupants of the tin shanties made a claim against the Canadian government, some in respect of the riots of February, 1919, and some, Sir Richard thought, also in respect of the riots in June, 1919. Some of them received compensation, others recovered none at all. Some did not apply to the Canadian government for compensation, he said.

Six Tenants Sue

Sir Richard told the Court that approximately six tenants of the tin shanties were suing the Surrey County Council for damages which the claimants said had risen from a riot. They were suing the Council under the Riot Act, he explained.

"But this was a riot of soldiers in a camp under military control, and in a place where the Surrey police would have no jurisdiction, and where, of course, they would not have a force which could possibly cope with them. That was the claim against the Surrey County Council," Sir Richard said.

The Surrey County Council said they were not liable, and if they were liable the ratepayers of Surrey would have to pay the damages.

Prices Too High

Sir Richard proceeded to argue that if the people who owned the shops put up their prices to such an extent that they provoked a riot then they were not entitled to damages. Upon that point the Surrey County Council relied on evidence from the Dominion, he said.

J. B. Melville, on behalf of the claimants, said the compensation made by the Canadian authorities was inadequate, and censured the Surrey Council for not taking steps to adjust the claims before the evidence and witnesses were removed to the Dominion.

"They did not pack up their tents and fit away immediately after the commission sat," he added.

Sir Richard then explained that the Canadian government had given the complainants what they thought they were entitled to after a full enquiry.

Had Their Bite

"They have had their bite at the Canadian authorities," Sir Richard said.

Mr. Melville replied that on November 11, 1919, the storekeepers were informed by the Canadian authorities in offering a contribution of five hundred pounds that "the Canadian authorities regret the circumstances and are making the above contribution not as an admission of liability but as an expression of regret and as an act of grace."

Coleridge has authorized to proceed to Ottawa will endeavor to get evidence from Canadian demobilized soldiers that would enable the Court to say whether or not excessive prices were charged the soldiers while they were stationed at Witley, and whether there was justification for a riot taking place.

In the meantime the case will stand over for a month until the return of the commission.

The question of costs was raised, and the Court agreed to a request by Mr. Melville that as far as the costs of the commission were concerned they should be reserved to the judge at the trial.
