FOG STILL IS OVER OTTAWA

No Word as to Possible Time of Election—Premier Is Undecided.

OTTAWA, Aug. 31.—Political organizers are here and the influx of members of parliament continues and discussions are going on all over the lot, but the fog has not lifted. The pendulum swings back and forth. Members of parliament express confidence that there will be another session and the indications for the moment point that way, but the pro-election influence both in and out of the cabinet is potential, and until some decisive conclusion is announced either alternative may be followed.

There is no argument that has not been put forward by the conflicting schools of thought, and Mr. Meighen is fully pondering over them all. What is said to weigh rather heavily with him are the views of the members from Ontario, the province upon which the greatest reliance is placed. In the main, but not wholly, they are against an election, predicating their opposition upon the hypothesis that the decline and fall of the agrarian party—which they most fear—is at hand. The great argument for an election is that the atmosphere will not clear until one is held and that the national situation is so serious as to call for a new mandate.

The trend today seems rather in favor of another session, but there is high authority for the statement that the Prime Minister has not come to any decision.

"K. ZODOK" IS CANON MEMBER

Hinchcliffe Does Spy Act in Connection with P.G.E. Work.

Premier John Oliver and members of his Legislative party touring the Pacific Great Eastern Railway got the thrill of their trip at Quesnel when "K. ZODOK," the down-and-out bewhiskered boozie who had been hanging around construction camps asking for a job, and had often been seen sitting in some secluded spot watching men work, turned out to be Canon Hinchcliffe, M.P.P. of Victoria, says the Vancouver Sun.

The Canon refused to make the inspection trip with Premier and other members of the Legislature because, he said, he had planned to go elsewhere in the province at the time the trip was scheduled. He also said that he intended to make his own inspection of the P. G. E.

Ten days ago a mysterious individual was seen around Quesnel. He was found one night sleeping in a garage. One night he came to the hotel, and registering as K. ZODOK of Vancouver, was given accommodation.

Asked For Job.

Early last week Assistant Engineer Kelly was approached by a man giving the name of ZODOK, who asked for a job on bridge work. Mr. Kelly was satisfied with his appearance as a worker until he examined his hands which showed that he had not been accustomed to manual work. When he was turned down because of this, ZODOK said that his hands were soft because he had just come out of hospital.

For a few days after that ZODOK was seen hanging around the camps and was fed at the navvies' grub-houses. One afternoon he sat for nearly three hours at the side of the right-of-way watching men work at the filling which had given way and thrown one of the construction engines into a gully.

Is Recognized.

Enquiries were made by construction officials as to the identity of the mysterious ZODOK. Suspicious that he was Canon Hinchcliffe were confirmed when the Premier's party arrived Friday night and identified him.

The Canon explained that he had adopted this method of finding out what was going on along the P. G. E., and examining the policy of the government engineers in charge of the work. He said that he found the boozies were well treated, but refused to discuss with reporters, accompanying the Premier, P. G. E. affairs, and the incognito method he had adopted.

The Premier invited the Canon to accompany his party on the special train. After shaving off his disguise the Canon travelled as far south as Williams Lake Saturday night and was treated to dinner in the dining-car by the Premier.

The fishery company has been at work erecting buildings and a cannery during the summer, and have 35 men employed at this work, in addition to fishermen. REVELATION REGARDING EXPENSIVE DEPARTMENTS IN BRITISH GOVERNMENT

LONDON, Sept. 1.—The Select Committee on Estimates, of which Sir Frederick Banbury is chairman, has turned a searchlight on the salaries and war bonuses of some of the inflated departments. The revelations in a report just issued are astounding. It conveys, as the estimates themselves are not designed to do, an impression of vast and expensive departments, with a multitude of officials in receipt of large salaries and earning those salaries in insatiable offices that devour the public revenues.

It is almost essential to make a chart in order to get a complete idea of the grading and sub-grading of officials. In the Treasury there are a Permanent Secretary, three Controllers, three Departmental Secretaries, a Principal Assistant Secretary, a Director of Women's Establishments, and no fewer than 14 heads of divisions, the humblest of whom receives a salary, including bonus, of £1,000 a year. In addition there is a temporary representative in the Ministry of Transport whose salary is £5,000 a year. Altogether there are 21 officials of the Treasury who receive more than £1,000 a year, as against eight in 1914. This is the Department which the Chancellor of the Exchequer says is unable to carry out that investigation of the national expenditure for which the Cabinet desires to set up a Committee of Business Men from outside Parliament.
