in "Local Boy Makes Good" This Week-End

Joe E. Brown is as funny as ever in "Local Boy Makes Good," an uproarious comedy which is offered on the Capitol Theatre screen this week-end, but in a different way. Men's Dress Shoes and In this picture he is timid, self-effacing and near-sighted—a victim of inferiority complex. He labors under the suppressed desire to be a devil with the ladies and at the same time a power among the athletes of the local college.

In reality, Joe is a clerk in a bookstore and a student of botany. In his dream-world he is forever mooning over and writing letters to Julia Winters, a pretty co-ed of a distant university, whose picture he has seen. These letters, filled with avowals of devotion and exaggerated praise of his own athletic ability, he never mails. Somebody else, however, does mail one of them and thereby hangs the tale.

The role of Julia Winters is played by Dorothy Lee, the petite blonde, who is well known from Wheeler and Woolsey pictures. Others taking part in the cast are Edward Nugent, Ruth Hall, Edward Woods, Wade Boteler, William Burress and John Harrington.
