DEVIL FISH ARE CAUGHT

Local Fisherman Captured 13 of Them in Skeena Yesterday—Table Delicacy.

Some people might not like the idea of eating octopus or devil fish, but to others this ugly monster of the deep is considered quite a delicacy. A halibut fisherman off the mouth of the Skeena River yesterday afternoon captured thirteen of these ferocious looking creatures and brought three of them to the Prince Rupert Fish Market in this city. Two of them have already been sold, one to some Japs and the other to a white man. The third is on exhibition in the shop window, where it is attracting quite a lot of attention.

The fish were caught yesterday off the rocks of the river by the fisherman in a rowboat. The ten which were not brought here will be used for halibut bait. The meat of the devil fish is white and has a surprisingly dainty appearance. It looks like eel flesh but has a taste all of its own, like that of skate more than anything else.

In an effort to preserve the salmon, the officials of the department will seek to exterminate the sea monsters which have been wrecking havoc in the fish preserve for years.
