Archbishop Visits Upper Stikine and Tells of the Wonders of the Country

After having baptized the chief of the Tahl-tan Indians, confirmed a number of natives, and travelled for days among the most wonderful scenery in the world, Archbishop DuVernet is home again this week from a visit to the upper Stikine country. There the Indians go to church twice every day when they are at home. At Telegraph Creek a parsonage is just being completed and a new church is to be commenced soon. Hunters are going into the country for big game and incidentally they see lava beds and basaltic rocks which are intensely interesting to the geologist.

Speaking of his visit, the Archbishop said:
To Telegraph Creek
"The Upper Stikine country is a vast and interesting region in the northern interior of British Columbia. It can be easily reached in the summer time by taking a gas boat from Wrangell, Alaska, and proceeding up the Stikine River. The journey to Telegraph Creek, which is a government and a Hudson's Bay Company post 150 miles up this river, occupies about two days and a half when conditions are favorable and the water is not too high or too low.

"About twenty miles up the river the boundary line is crossed, and the Canadian Customs officer takes a careful record of every one entering the interior by this route. This is important as lonely prospectors might easily be lost in the wilds.

Immense Glaciers
"It is doubtful if any navigable river in the world affords grander scenery. Both banks are lined with towering mountains varying in rugged outline. There are at least a dozen large glaciers, and many more smaller ones. Popoff glacier is so called because the ice comes to the edge of a precipice and then pops off. The Big Glacier is six miles wide where it spreads out like a fan on the north bank of the river after having slowly descended fifty miles between mountain peaks.

"Above the Big Canyon the scenery and the climate change. The country becomes a little more open. The river is less serpentine as the water has evidently cut its way more easily through the basaltic rocks. Sculptured columns stand prominently out worthy of a stately temple. Here and there lava beds may be seen testifying to mighty volcanic action. As yet few tourists take this scenic trip but it is known to many big game hunters who come from different parts of the world to shoot bear and moose and mountain sheep in the Upper Stikine country.

"On the same boat in which Archbishop DuVernet went up the river in the middle of August were no less than three hunting parties, including Dr. Arbutnot, of Pittsburgh, Pa., Dr. Burthe, New Orleans, La., and Lord Claude Hamilton of England."

Arriving on Friday afternoon,

August 19, the bishop the same evening baptized the chief of the Tahl-tan tribe and confirmed four Indians presented by the Rev. F. P. Thorman. Some of these left the next day as guides to the hunters. On the following Sunday the bishop confirmed six other natives. Walking with the missionary and his wife to the Indian village of Tahl-tan which is twelve miles further up the Stikine River the bishop confirmed three more Indians in the little log church which stands out so prominently when approaching this village which is perched on high plateau. He says it is an interesting sight to see the Indians trooping to church at 9 a.m. and at 7 p.m. every day while they are at home and not out in the wilds. The little community like one big family begin and end the day with the worship of the Common Father, the Great Spirit.

Saw Mill Donated

The new parsonage at Telegraph Creek will soon be finished, and it is hoped then to begin the new church. The building of these two structures has been rendered possible through the donation of a portable sawmill by kind friends in England, but even though much of the work is being done by the missionary himself there are heavy costs yet needing to be met. The Rev. F. P. Thorman is a Cambridge graduate and a returned soldier. He is well worthy of financial support for he is the only clergyman of any denomination resident in the Upper Stikine country.
