

"The Regent"

This is a splendid instrument both from the standpoint of Tone Reproduction and Good Appearance. It is equipped with a universal tone arm that plays all makes of records, and also a wooden tone chamber. Being a cabinet instrument, it has a place for keeping the records. It is sold at a moderate price. We have no hesitation in saying it is the best moderately-priced phonograph on the market—really unusual value for the money.

CHANGE UNION JACK NOT NECESSARY

Suggestion of New Flag With Each Nation of the Empire Represented.

It has been announced that the creation of the Irish Free State will involve the alteration of the Union Jack to its old form by taking out the cross of St. Patrick, says the London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian. An authority I have consulted says there is no need to do anything of the kind. He points out that the "union" commemorated in the flag is the union of crowns, which will persist. He also deprecates any interference with the Union Jack on artistic grounds. He says that for design and "blaze" the Union Jack is perfect. It is not an invented design at all, of course, but simply the result of combining the cross of St. George, the cross of St. Andrew, and the cross of St. Patrick. If the St. Patrick's cross were taken out we should return to what is known as the first union flag, which is simply the Scottish St. Andrew's cross—blue ground, white diagonal cross—with the red cross of St. George superimposed. This was used from the time of the union with Scotland to the union with Ireland, 1801, and it has great historical associations. Others think that it may be necessary to introduce changes in the Royal Standard. A suggestion sent me by a friend is that the Standard might be so changed as to symbolize the British Commonwealth as a whole, including Ireland. The leopards of England and the red lion of Scotland and the harp of Ireland might be retained, and the emblems of all other dominions introduced so as to give a complete heraldic picture of the Empire.
