MAXIM GORKI AND RUSSIA

Famous Socialist Writer Says
Peasantry of His Country
Are Cruel

WOMEN ARE BEATEN

Maxim Gorki has written a new book, which is about to appear in Russian and German. The most important subject of this new work is the Russian peasant, whom Gorki now paints in the darkest colors as a monster of primitively cunning brutality. A few extracts will show how far Gorki's views have changed during the past few years on the people whom he really ought to know and understand.

"I think," he says, "that just as a sense of humor is the Englishman's exceptional peculiarity, the Russian people's outstanding quality is a sense of special cruelty. There is a diabolical sharpness about Russian cruelty, something exquisite and refined."

Useful Maxims

"I believe," continues Gorki, "that women are nowhere else so pitilessly and terribly beaten as in the Russian village, and probably no other country has such advisory maxims as: 'Beat your wife with the butt-end of an axe; if she falls down, sniffs, and gasps, she is deceiving; give her some more!' Or, 'A wife is twice kind, on her wedding day and at her funeral.' Or, 'Do what you like with women and cattle.' Or, 'The more you beat your wife, the better she will be your soup.'"

TIMBER SALE X 4178.

"I suffered with Rheumatism for five years, having it so badly at times I was unable to get up.
I tried medicines I saw advertised, and was treated by doctors but the Rheumatism always came back.

In 1916, I saw in an advertisement that "Fruit-a-tives" would stop Rheumatism and took a box, and got relief; then took "Fruit-a-tives" right along for about six months and I have never felt my Rheumatism since."

"Children are also thoroughly beaten, Russians like beating generally, and it is all the same whom they beat."

Civil War

About the civil war Gorki writes:

"I asked some participants in the civil war whether they did not feel any compunction against killing one another, and they said: 'No, we don't mind it; he has a gun, I have a gun, we are equal. One kills the other, more room for the rest.' One replied: 'War at home is nothing. Against strangers it is difficult; it goes against the grain. It is much easier to kill Russians. There are so many of us; we have no order. Burn a village, what is it? It would burn down of itself sooner or later in any case. Besides, that is our own matter, a sort of manoeuvre, as it were, for the sake of experience. But when I was in Prussia at the beginning of the war, you can't think how sorry I was for the people there, their villages, their towns, their order. What we destroyed, and didn't know why! Truly, I was nearly glad when I got wounded; I was so sick of it all.'"

"Men Are Now Cheap."

Gorki relates that a scientific expedition in the Urals was met in 1921 by a peasant with these words: "You are scholars; tell me what to do. A Bashkir killed my cow; I of course, killed the Bashkir. But now I have stolen a cow from the Bashkir's family; will anything be done to me?" He was asked whether he did not expect to be punished for killing the man, but he quietly answered, "Oh, that is nothing; men are now cheap."

The peasantry, Gorki says, has become very ill-disposed towards the towns, regarding the townspeople as parasites, living on the labor and products of the country, and producing only unnecessary things with which they impose on the simplicity of the country people.

Famine Good

Then Gorki goes on to deal with the attitude towards those suffering from famine. He quotes a "real Russian peasant" as follows: "Don't cry in Riazan about the poor harvest at Pskoff. The evil is great. Many people are dying. Who is dying? The weak, the worn-out. All the better for those who remain alive. We don't notice that the war cleared much space, but now they say millions are dying out. We shall notice that. Think of it! Reckon five acres of land to each who dies. What a lot of free land we shall have!"

Gorki declares that the Russian nation is "a community of semi-savage people." He then goes on: "The cruel form of the revolution I explain by the exceptional brutality of the Russian people." Gorki nevertheless looks upon the future of the Russian people optimistically.

Changing Fast

"Now," he says, "we may with conviction affirm that at the price of the intellectual and working classes, the Russian peasantry has come to life. As with the Jews whom Moses led out of Egyptian bondage, the semi-savage, foolish, apathetic inhabitants of the Russian villages, including the monsters described above, will die out, and their place will be taken by a new race, literate, intelligent, courageously healthy. I do not think this will be a very gentle or kind people; but it will be an active people, suspicious, and indifferent to everything for which it can have no direct need."—London Times.

PRETTY WEDDING AT TERRACE HALLOWE'EN

Miss Edith Raven becomes Bride of Harry S. Creelman, Rural
Dean Marsh Officiating

TERRACE, Nov. 2.—A very pretty wedding took place at 7 p.m. Tuesday evening, Oct. 31, at the Rectory when Miss Edith Raven became the bride of Harry S. Creelman. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Rural Dean Marsh.

The room was prettily decorated with autumn leaves and mountain ash berries. The bride wore a navy blue suit and embroidered blouse of pink crepe de chine and a beaver hat with silver trimmings. She was attended by her sister Miss Rose Raven who also wore a blue suit with a blouse of apricot satin. They both carried carnations.

The bride was given away by her father Mr. J. Raven of Kailum. Harry Walberg was best man. The only other guests present were the bride's mother, Mrs. J. Raven and her brother Charles Raven and wife.

The wedding supper was served immediately after the ceremony in the dining room of the Terrace hotel.

ALICE ARM

The first debate of the season "Resolved that mining is of more benefit to the province than farming," was given by the Alice Arm Debating Society last week. The negative side won on the vote of the audience by 22 to 11. The speakers were Al Falconer, E. R. Galtman and Leo Pauler for the affirmative and E. Moss, J. McDonald and R. Bellett for the negative. President C. P. Reil presided.

Twelve tons of ore a day is now coming down the hill from the Esperanza Mine for shipment to the Anyox smelter. There is now 100 tons on hand at the bunkers on the wharf.

A masquerade ball was held at the Alice Arm Hotel on Friday evening. Refreshments were provided by the ladies.

Dan Grady, a pioneer of Alice Arm, is back again paying a visit of a few days to the camp.
