LYNCHINGS IN UNITED STATES

Horrible Crimes Committed Against Negroes Who Charged with Offences.

Since the 1st of May eight negroes have been lynched in the Southern States of the United States. Four of them were burned alive while crowds looked on. Such lynchings are common happenings in certain States, but this epidemic of them, crowded into a few weeks and coinciding with consideration by the Senate of a Federal anti-lynching bill, has focused national attention to an unusual degree upon a form of mob crime which is heinous in this country and is unknown elsewhere, says the Manchester Guardian special correspondent at New York.

Three negroes were burned at the same stake in a little Texas town on May 6. They, however, even while the flames were searing them, steadfastly pleaded their innocence. When the three were dead their charred bodies were soaked with oil and burned to ashes. Two days later another negro who had been charged with the same crime was found hanging from a tree near the scene of the triple lynching.

Was Tortured.

Shortly after the police discovered evidence which seemed to trace the assault to a white man. On May 18 a fifteen-year-old negro boy was tortured over a slow fire while 2,000 men watched and cheered. Finally he
