Time To Consider

Daylight Saving.

This is a good time to consider the question of daylight saving in order to determine whether to adopt it next year or not. It has been given a good trial and there are many arguments for and against it. Possibly the city council may see its way clear to hold a plebiscite at the annual election to decide whether to have it next year or not.

Those who favor putting the clocks ahead point to the great success of the football, baseball and lacrosse games this season, something which would not have been possible had there been no daylight saving ordinance. Many who have taken the evenings off for swimming are also enthusiastic over the measure. Taken as a whole the young people of the city would seem to favor daylight saving.

On the other hand there are the parents of children who are difficult to manage and who want to stay up till about midnight at midsummer because of the long light evenings. They object to the change. There are also the people who have to do with the railway and telegraphs where the hours do not conform with local conditions but with the standard time adopted by the whole system. On the whole, opinion seems somewhat divided in regard to the matter, judging from opinions heard on the street.

There are some who advocate having the daylight saving for July and August only, the months when the children are having their holidays. A compromise of this kind might solve the difficult question.

In order to get at the facts the Daily News will be glad to publish short letters from any who are affected by this measure and who could give their experiences in regard to it. Such letters would prove instructive and might aid the civic authorities in solving the problem of what to do in future.

Other Newspaper Owners Than Northcliffe.

In notices in the United States and Canadian papers referring to the death of Lord Northcliffe it was generally taken for granted that he controlled more newspapers than any other English publisher, says "Marketing." As a matter of fact, both in number and in total circulation, the newspapers owned and controlled by Sir Edward Hulton greatly exceed those of the late peer. At least two others control more individual newspapers, and in both instances the organization has been built up within the last few years. They are Sir Charles Starmer, who at the outbreak of the war owned but a few obscure provincial dailies, and Sir W. Berry, whose first rung on the journalistic ladder was our English contemporary, "The Advertising World." Sir W. Berry's rise has been almost breathless in its rapidity, but his name is little known outside the journalistic world. Lord Riddell with one newspaper having a circulation of over three millions, and the output of the houses of George Newnes and Son, and G. A. Pearson, Ltd., both of which he controls, probably enjoys a greater aggregate circulation than do the Northcliffe affiliations.

Like Hearst in the United States, Northcliffe stamped his personality on all his newspapers, and, consciously or unconsciously, made them his own personal advertising media. The prominence universally given to his words and acts, and the unique power he wielded, are but further confirmation of the saying, "It Pays to Advertise."

Hunters Beware Shooting Too Soon.

The hunting season opens tomorrow with the right to shoot geese and ducks. A week later deer will be legal game. From that time on for several months the woods will be full of hunters on Sundays and holidays and the greatest care will be necessary to avoid accidents. When a man is looking for deer, he sees a prospective deer in every moving thing and the tendency among the inexperienced is to shoot without making sure what is ahead. In that way many people have lost their lives. Every season there are casualties due to the extreme eagerness of the hunter and the neglect to make sure what is the target. In order to avoid such contingencies every hunter should have it on his mind all the time that he must make sure that it is a deer and not a man he is firing at and that the deer is a buck and not a doe.

APPRECIATION AVIATOR PREST

Fairbanks Paper Speaks of the Daring and Skill of Former Visitor Here

Aviator Prest who is with us this evening may truly be said to be the pioneer of aviation in the North, and will probably be the first man to penetrate by air to the North by individual effort, for next year he will make it to Siberia, says the Fairbanks News-Miner-Citizen in a recent number.

The Black Wolf Squadron beat Mr. Prest to this country by two years but this was a de luxe trip, with all the difficulties possible smoothed and varnished for them. They had an advance agent, who went ahead and arranged for and had every necessary thing, or everything that would be necessary if it was, on the ground when they arrived. They had the population of every town en route working for them, creating landing places and preparing for the banquet afterwards. They had the government of the United States back of them, the command of telegraph lines and the weather bureau doing nothing but keep them advised as to how the rooster on the weather-vane was "deviating" at that particular hour. Every pilot had a mechanic, and every mechanic had a pup, and life was just one glad sweet song to them from start to finish of the trip, but at that they all had more troubles of their own than did Mr. Prest on his trip.

Gambling Chance

Mr. Prest left New York all alone in a Standard machine. He was his own advance agent, mechanic and weather prophet. He took every "gamblin' chance, there was on the way and flew to within 100 miles of Fairbanks when a fool little sparkplug went peluk and landed him in the tundra where the niggerheads were four feet high and there was no possible chance to get out of there by air. Alone, with only a herd of caribou for company, he stripped his machine and started to pack it to some place which showed signs of human life, and he would have done it if he could have lasted, but he found the woods full of Northerners who were out searching for him and they took him into camp.

Mr. Prest is of the stuff of which real pioneers are made. He will get by, in any flight he undertakes if spark plugs and other machine contraptions don't throw him down. And, if they do—well he ain't afraid.

LADIES MUST LIVE SAYS BETTY COMPSON

It is conceded even by woman haters that ladies must live; be they rich or poor, or ambitious or otherwise. How some of them manage to do so is adequately shown by the late George Loane Tucker in his screen masterpiece, "Ladies Must Live," which will be shown at the Westholme theatre tonight. In this delightful and appealing story, Betty Compson, now a Paramount star and the featured player in the picture named, has the role of a young girl who has been reared by her rich brother-in-law and whose penniless father plans to marry off to some rich man in order that his income, derived from his son-in-law, may be increased. But there is another woman who has similar plans to obtain an easy living and the two clash with interesting results. Then there is a wife whose love proves a tragedy, and other characters all of whom are component parts of a most consistent story of modern life.

"Ladies Must Live" is a picture-ization of a story by Alice Duer Miller which was published in the Saturday Evening Post. It is a dramatic and appealing picture.

The Man in the Moon SAYS—

THE person who makes stout persons thin may be said to "live on the fat of the land."

THE golf fiend is not the only bore in the world. There is the man with the smart kids whose half the bad things really happened.

THE stock in trade of the talkative woman is seldom more than a thousand words, but the turnover is large enough to make any business man jealous.

Ten Years Ago in Prince Rupert

September 8, 1912.

After having had charge of St. Andrew's Anglican Church for over six years, Bishop Du Vernet will next week hand the mission over to Rev. E. C. Bureh who will arrive in a day or so from Winnipeg. Rev. W. E. Col-lison will be in charge of St. Peter's, Seal Cove.
