Who Said Lloyd George Was a Back Number?

Who said Lloyd George was a back number? All he has to do is to get up and make a speech and he has the British people by the heart strings and carries on as usual. In spite of the strenuous opposition of the powerful Northcliffe press, the opposition of extreme labor and the further opposition of the extreme Conservatives, the British Premier carries on serenely, doing what he considers his duty from day to day. Sometimes he is very inconsistent, his critics say. So he is. That is the mark of genius. Sometimes he does not carry out his promises. There again further light on a subject shows him that a line of action is injudicious and he drops it.

Conducting the affairs of a country in the centre of the maelstrom of European and world politics and in the country where action and speech approach closer to true freedom than in any other country in the world, is the biggest job in the world. And it is probable that Lloyd George is by far the biggest man in the world. He makes mistakes, as all great men do, but he is head and shoulders above any other person in the country or in the world today, so far as can be seen from this distance.

"I cast myself on the people because I have never betrayed them," was a type of one of those little touches that make Lloyd George intensely human. He is a simple old man but his brain is working all the time and he confers with kings and rulers, with statesmen and politicians, towering above them all in knowledge of world affairs and in the human touch which makes him one with us all.

In Closer Touch With Outside Points.

Readers of the Daily News will notice that an effort is being made to get into closer touch with outside points by publishing news of the districts. Correspondents are wanted at several points now but it is difficult to get the right people who are reliable and yet who know what is news and are willing to give a little time to the work. It is a distinct advantage to any community to have a good correspondent who will keep the outside in touch with events in his centre. The local newspapers all have a function to perform but the dailies also have their function and that is to bring the latest telegraphic and district news to the readers of the district. It is the aim to make the Daily News a district paper, covering the whole of northern and central British Columbia. In this we are already having considerable success. We have a great many regular readers at all points from here to Prince George and in the mining camps and settlements on the coast. More and more people are looking to this paper to keep them informed on the events of this district. Any co-operation in doing this will be appreciated. Any person willing to act as local correspondent at places not already served should write the editor in connection with it and receive instruction as to the method of doing the work.

Do We Co-operate One With The Other?

Is there sufficient co-operation between Prince Rupert and the surrounding towns and villages? It is often charged that there is not. We all have common interests as well as local interests. We in Prince Rupert are often in a position to help the districts and the outside points can co-operate. People come here and make this their centre of work. Many commercial men make their headquarters in the city. Wholesale houses are established here. This is the market for a good deal of the fruit and produce raised in the district. The difficulty is that we are all so intensely striving to make a good living that we sometimes forget our duty to the smaller places. As a result we find the smaller places antagonistic and feeling that we are not sympathetic to them.

It is to overcome that feeling that the Daily News is extending its circulation to cover the outlying points. In this paper the person who has a proposal for development or improvement can also reach the readers it wants. Community of interest should breed community of effort and it is to be hoped that the people of the northern and central B.C. will use this paper as much as possible to forward their interests.

On Saturday we published a resolution passed at a public meeting at Burns Lake. This we were glad to do. People on the Queen Charlotte Islands, at Granby Bay, at Stewart and at all the towns from here to Prince George and beyond will read that resolution and there is no other way in which the people of Burns Lake could have put their views before the whole district as through publication in this paper.

POLITICS TODAY IN AUSTRALIA

General Election in December Looks Bad For Present Government

LONDON, Oct. 16 Canadian Press. Several factors promise to lead to the forthcoming general elections in the Commonwealth of Australia an unusual degree of interest. One is the newly risen enmity between the Prime Minister, Rt. Hon. W. M. Hughes, and the leaders of the country, or Farmers' party which has hitherto proved a more or less docile supporter of the nationalist ministry; another is the growing sentiment in the Liberal wing of the Nationalist party in favor of a reversion to pure Liberalism; and a third is the operation of a redistribution measure which may have an important bearing on the composition of the new parliament.

Great Differences

In the present parliament the state of parties, excluding the Nationalist Speaker (Sir Elliot Johnson) is: Nationalists, 37; Country party 13; Labor 23. It will be seen, therefore, that even including the Speaker, Mr. Hughes has only a clear majority of one over the other two parties. In reality, however, his position has been much more secure than the figures would suggest. There is not a shadow of community of interest between the low tariff Country party and the high protectionist Labor party; between the representative of the rural producer and the spokesman of the Trades Hall, with its dream of a rural workers' trade union and the introduction of an eight-hour day and a fixed minimum wage for farm laborers; and Mr. Hughes, master tactician as he is, has adroitly contrived to accentuate the breach between the two parties, with the result that they have invariably been found on opposite sides of the Chair in times of crisis.

Angry Scenes

But the outlook is changing. The present session, the last of the present parliament, has been marked by angry scenes between Mr. Hughes and the leaders of the Country party and in one division the prime minister found the entire party ranged with Labor against him. Indeed it was only by a chance majority of one vote that the ministry managed to escape defeat. The quarrel began during the last session with some trenchant criticism by the Country party leader, Dr. Earle Page, of the ministry's financial policy, particularly its failure to effect the requisite measure of economy. Mr. Hughes, ever impudent of criticism, replied in a speech unhappily tinged with stinging personalities and from that point the controversy was waged with increasing bitterness.

Troubled Water

Truth to tell, Mr. Hughes, having held office as Prime Minister for the record term of seven years, finds himself in troubled water. It is not his old Labor enemies who will be his most formidable opponents in the coming fight, for Labor was rarely at a lower ebb; it is a combination of city and rural business interests, the latter represented by the Liberal wing of the Nationalists, who fused with the conscriptionist Laborites in 1917 to form a new party that has held the reins of government ever since. Among the Liberals in parliament and among the wealthy organizations which support them outside there is a growing sentiment in favor of a breakaway from the Nationalist cause, a reversion to Liberalism, and a consequent renunciation of those Labor principles which were embodied in the Nationalist platform as part of a scheme of compromise at the time of the fusion.

Mr. Watt has frankly declared that he favors such a policy and should the election give an indeterminate state of parties, a fusion between the Liberals and the Country party and the ousting of Mr. Hughes and his erstwhile Labor followers are not beyond the realms of probability.

ENGINE RUNS AMOK DURING MANOEUVRES

LISBON, Oct. 16. The engine of the Lisbon-Madrid express during manoeuvres before leaving the station today, suddenly went wrong and jumped the rails. Then it dashed off at a furious speed and charged with enormous force into the station buildings. Cutting clean through the brick walls and dragging its tender behind, the engine dashed into the station square outside, which was filled with smoke. There was immediate panic and people rushed for safety. Only one woman was injured, as the train was empty.

"Superb Quality"

Mr. and Mrs. Du Bernis are direct from Paris, France, and their visit to the city at this juncture is partly in connection with business as well as pleasure.

M. R. Jamieson, proprietor of the Northern Hotel at Stewart, who was brought down from the latter place a few days ago suffering from a serious illness, is at the General hospital and doing as well as could be expected. His numerous friends in this city will anxiously await the news of his speedy return to the road of recovery.

Caught in the winch of the Prince George this morning whilst taking part in the unloading of freight, a deck hand named David Graham, suffered severe injuries to his body and was taken to the general hospital.
