

FINAL SCENES TRIAL OF THE TWO MURDERERS

Efforts to Make Political Speech to Court Frustrated by Judge

At the final scenes at the trial of the two murderers Dunn and O'Sullivan, who killed Sir Henry Wilson in London and who were hanged a few days ago, the prisoner Dunn asked to be allowed to read a statement which the judge declared was a justification of the right to kill. This he refused read. Dunn addressing the court said:

I suppose I must cut out the patriotic objectives I fell inclined to use under the present circumstances but I must state that I feel still, under these very same circumstances, proudly conscious that I am an Irishman. You have all heard the accounts from the Divisional Inspector who has been asked for accounts of my character, and you will agree that this is the first time that I, and my friend, for that matter, have appeared in any criminal court. That I take a particular pride in, besides my national pride i being a member of the Irish race, I had endeavored to give an honest statement of the matter from a national point of view, but it seems that privilege is denied me. I for my part, am sorry that you, as members of the jury are denied the chance of hearing an honest Irishman's statement. Several of you, I have no doubt, endeavored to do your best in the recent great European war. I also took my share in that war, fighting for the principles for which this country stood. Those principles, I found, as an Irishman, were not applied to my own country, and I have endeavored to strike a blow for it.

Not Mean Assassin.

I have no doubt that, from the evidence which has been put before you by the prosecution, and from the more legal point of view, you will return a verdict of "Guilty" against me and my comrade, but I wish to assure you even your verdict and the verdict of the Judge here will not be sufficient to denounce me, before the members of the race to which I have the honor to belong, as a criminal. I have never before appeared in any criminal court, and my intentions have never been criminal, as such. I am not a mean assassin who endeavored to slink away; bear that in mind. I have been termed by various journals a cut-throat and assassin, although, of course, the term cut-throat does not apply but I wish to state that the motives which impelled me in disadvantage.

BRINGING UP FATHER

this action were seriously considered, as I believe the motives which impelled the taking of human life in the great European war were seriously considered. I received no money for this particular piece of business.

So, in conclusion, I wish to state that even though, as I surmise, I will be found "guilty" by this jury, and by you members of the jury who were probably my former comrades in the European war, I trust that the Higher Court, which is the only Court which matters, and which does not belong to this world, will consider the purity of my intentions.

O'Sullivan.

O'Sullivan, when asked by his Lordship whether he wished to make any statement replied: What I have to say, my Lord, was contained in the document you have, and as you will not let the jury hear that, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. Justice Shearman asked the Attorney-General whether he wished to have the document read.

The Attorney-General replied that the right of the prisoner to make a statement on matters relevant to the charge made against him had not been taken away. The document which had been handed to his Lordship contained a number of statements which, if given in the witness-box, would be stopped as being irrelevant to the case. It was in his Lordship's discretion whether the document should be read by an officer of the Court.

Imaginary Grievance.

Mr. Justice Shearman—The only doubt is whether there will be any imaginary grievance about the non-reading of the statement. My own feeling is that the statement is wholly irrelevant, and will serve no good purpose. Unless you desire to have it read I will adhere to my decision.

The Attorney-General—I do not wish to take any course that would put the prisoners at any disadvantage. I do not see that the motives which impelled me in this statement can give them any advantage.

Mr. Justice Shearman read passages from the statement referring to the prisoners' career in the British Army.

The Attorney-General then addressed the jury briefly, saying that the evidence that had been given completely proved that the two prisoners had wilfully and purposely fired at and murdered Sir Henry Wilson.

Mr. Justice Shearman, in summing up, said there was not a shadow of relevant evidence to prove that the acts of the prisoners were in self-defence, or in any circumstances which could reduce the verdict to manslaughter.

Verdict and Sentence.

The jury retired at 4:20, and returned after an absence of two minutes. They brought in a verdict of guilty against both prisoners.

Dunn was asked the formal question of whether he had anything to say why sentence should not be pronounced and he replied: Yes, I have a few words to say. There exist, and have existed, certain living exceptions to this general rule of justice. Captain Bowen-Colthurst, who murdered Mr. Sheehy Skeffington, Captain Hardy, of Dublin Castle, who murdered Brigadier McKee of the Irish Army and Peter Clancy.

Mr. Justice Shearman—Now listen to me again! Dunn. You are asked the question whether there is any legal ground why judgment should be postponed. You are not at liberty to use this opportunity for a political address, and I shall not permit you to do so. Is there anything on the record to show why judgment should be reserved instead of being given now? That is the only matter on which you are at liberty to address me. You are not at liberty to address me a political oration.

Did It For Ireland.

Dunn proceeded as follows:
