FARM LABORERS IN ENGLAND ARE IDLE

Minister of Agriculture Says Much Land in That Country Will go Back to Pasture

VICTORIA, Oct. 4—Determined to do everything in his power to bring British farm laborers to British Columbia to help to settle up the vacant areas of this Province, Hon. E. D. Barrow, minister of agriculture, is back at his desk at the Parliament Buildings following his trip to England.

"I saw large number of farm laborers in England who are finding it difficult to get work and who are keen to come to Canada," Mr. Barrow stated. "We should support any scheme which will aid this immigration movement."

The Minister said that he did not wish to say any more about plans for bringing British settlers here until he had gone into the matter more carefully and conferred with his colleagues.

"The agricultural industry in Britain today is in a very bad condition," Mr. Barrow said. "People who raise grain will not pay operating expenses this year. Wages for farm laborers are low and many farmers are employing more men than they need simply to keep them from swelling the ranks of the unemployed. As a result of these conditions large areas of land will be turned into pasture, thus throwing more farm laborers out of work.

"Large numbers of these people, the finest type of settlers available, are ready to come to Canada, if proper measures are taken to assist them. They are real sons of the soil and will not flock into the cities. They would make splendid settlers in British Columbia.

"What we need," Mr. Barrow asserted, "is selected immigration. We do not need city dwellers, but farmers who will stay on the land."

The New York Yankees, youngest club in the American League and pennant winners this year for the third consecutive time, entered the circuit in 1902. The team was established by Frank J. Farrell and their place in the league was made by the forfeiture of the Baltimore Oriole franchise. Clark Griffith was made manager and he guided the destinies of the team until 1908 when he resigned in favor of Kid Eberfield. George Stallings took charge in 1909 and held on until the next year when Hal Chase became manager. Chase was succeeded in 1912 by Harry Wolverton. Then came Frank Chance who led the club until 1914 when he resigned after failing to make the team a pennant contender. Roger Peckinpaugh finished the 1914 season, the last of the Farrell regime. In 1915 Cols. Jacob Ruppert and T. L. Huston purchased the club paying something around half a million dollars for the franchise, players and their property.

Until this time the Yankees had been "in an outers." Ruppert and Huston immediately began building up with new players. Bill Donovan was employed as manager. His club in three seasons could do no better than fourth, however, and Miller Huggins was placed in charge. Huston and Ruppert continued their generous outlay of money for stars. Babe Ruth, who had won fame as a pitcher and hitter with the Boston Red Sox, came to New York. With Babe came luck. In 1921 the Yankees won their first pennant. Ruth set a new all-time record for home runs with 59 that year. After their lease on the grounds in Washing Heights expired in 1913, the Yankees shared the use of the Polo grounds with the Giants for nine years, but after their unusually successful seasons of 1921 and 1922 the Yankee owners decided to build their own park. The Yankee Stadium, greatest baseball plant in the world, was opened to the public this year. After some negotiations Colonel Huston, half owner of the Yankees sold his interest early this year to Colonel Ruppert for about $1,500,000, netting a gross profit of $1,000,000 in eight years.

In the twenty-one years of American League baseball in New York the Yankees have finished as follows:

1903	Fourth
1904	Second
1905	Sixth
1906	Second
1907	Fifth
1908	Eighth
1909	Fifth

TOO MUCH LIFE

NEW YORK, Oct. 4.—Four adults, five children, fifteen pigeons, two cats, one dog and two canary birds are too many to live in one four-room apartment, Magistrate Barrett told Salvotore Crivello, who recently answered a health department summons after fellow tenants had complained that a nocturnal cacophony from the apartment was unendurable.

Crivello was fined $5 for having pigeons in violation of the Sanitary Code. The magistrate advised him to dispose of the menagerie.
