Degrading Fate For Useful Vessel.

It was a degrading fate for a member of the coasting fleet of steamers to go into a business bordering on the piratical, where, according to rumor, two men were killed on her decks and thrown overboard. The good little vessel Prince Albert that once carried peaceful settlers to and from Massett Inlet, that carried convivial parties to Stewart or that took cabbages and canliflowers to the canneries, now is branded all over the coast as a rum runner, a possible high jacker, close associate of the kind of vessel that formerly ran up the Jolly Roger.

And yet many will look on the life of adventure as a rum runner as a life of more or less glorious activity. In days to come, perhaps, the novelist will lend the business a charm of romance and will perpetuate the memory of the days when people were ruled by their thirsts and when they were ready to trade on the thirsts of their less stable neighbors.

British Election Goes Merrily On.

The British elections take place on Thursday of next week and it is hoped that arrangements will be made to get the returns here that evening. All classes of people and sympathizers are auxious to know what the results will be. Each group there has a corresponding group here that hopes it will win. The majority, however, seem to hope that Baldwin will win and the country will go protectionist. That would affect us materially, but it is hardly to be expected, according to the average free trader from the Old Country. Our opinion is that anything may be expected from an election and that often the people appreciate the bold and courageous thing such as Baldwin has done.

H. G. Wells Writes

About Success. What is success? Everything depends upon what you mean by the word as to whether you have made a success or a failure of life. H. G. Wells discusses the question in a most interesting manner in the American Magazine for December. He claims that the lives of Lord Northcliffe, David Lloyd George and Lord Beaverbrook, even though the last mentioned wrote a treatise about it, have not been successes, and neither was that of Napoleon Buonaparte, whereas Abraham Lincoln, Lord Bacon, Jesus of Nazareth, Sir Christopher Wren, the poet Shelly, Edgar Allan Poe, Charles Darwin, J. M. Keynes, and Professor Einstein were all successful men. And this is his . reason for them all:

"The thing that matters in a man is the thing that is peculiar to him, his distinctive gift and aptitude, however small it may be. To realize that, to develop it to the full and bring it to the completest fruition is at once the full triumph of one's individual self and the supreme sacrifice one can render to man-

Of such men as Lord Northcliffe and Lloyd George, Wells says: "They took the world as it came; they took it with entirely prehensile, inartistic hands. I submit they were not successes at all, but the mere spendthrifts of aptitude and good fortune. Their lives have been lives, not of achievement but in- year flation. They have known no true satisfactions, and I submit are that not only have they never reached Lord Beaverbrook's 'in- ing ner shrine of happiness' but that they have never even discov- office in Prince Rupert. ered that the vast, gaudy, ill-proportioned temple into which they have struggled is not even the temple of success at all." In the article Mr. Wells gives a most interesting personal petition to the Honorable the Hog country and covering the and whist. sketch of Alfred Harmsworth, written to show that he was not Attorney, General asking him to country between Stewart and a success. He also mentions others. The article is one that shove through a law giving Hazelton, claims that the route is well worth reading and especially worth the while of any common people the right to ex. from Stewart will be the short- president of the Nechako Valyoung man or woman entering on a career. It is something for press themselves in any kind of est to the great northern coal ley Liberal Association succeed-

Possibly it is one of the best things Wells has written.

OUR HALIBUT FISHERMEN RUPERT'S BEST ASSET

When you see the Deep-Sea Fishermen Go strolling up the town,

And you listen to their jargon on the way: Did it ever strike your fancy That you'd give a lot to learn,

The sort of life they lead from day to day.

Are they married? Are they single?

Have they any cares at all? Does the Deep hold any terrors for their souls?

Are their hearts beset with feelings Like the common herd of men?

Do they curse the blooming gas-boat when she rolls?

have met these hardy sea-dogs.

When their boats are in the Bay, I've been with them on the bosom of the Deep;

have gone to Whale Bank with them,

And around by Reynold's Sound, And I know the lonely vigils that they keep.

They're a jolly set of beggars, They're as hard as any nail,

They never seem to care when work is done; In port they gauge the sharpened hooks

And measure off the gear, And on the side they have a little fun.

You can meet them down at Lipsett's

Getting oil-clothes for the trip, Or oiling up the gurdy for the fray;

At Nickerson's you'll meet them

A-hauling out the grub Or becketting the gear throughout the day.

But the fishermen you see in Port

Are not the men you see When the skipper gives the word, "All hands on deck."

The' the blooming tempest roars,

And the billows smoke and foam, They "chute the gear." It's little that they reck.

And then the skates are strung With anchors on each end,

And bamboo-poles with flags are floating free;

The decks are cleared for action, And the battle has begun,

And "oil-up" boys are all that you can see.

And when the haul is over

And the boys go down below.

That "Mug-up" is a pretty sight to see; They're simple, honest fellows,

And success has made them glad, They have wives and sweethearts waiting, just as we."

With a will they make the "Dress-up"

By the small electric light,

And in ice the fish are snugly laid away: * Then they snatch an hour in slumber,

Except the lonely watch, Who with straining eyes is watching for the day.

When the sea's a raging maelsfrom,

And the Sou'east howls and roars,

And the spray is turned to solid ice that's thick on spars

Then the men must work like demons With chopper, axe and knife,

Or good-bye to dear old Rupert, to bairns and to wife,

Oh, when you see the Fishermen Go strolling up the town,

And you wonder at their happy, care-free way;

Did you ever stop to think it out-

What hardships they endure,

When they leave the quiet waters of Cow-Bay! James C. Brady.
