ESTIMATES OF LIBRARY CUT

Items for Books, Periodicals and Transportation Totalling $1100 Eliminated by City

The city council has cut the estimates of the library board for the year by $1,100, the items lopped off being $1,000 for new books, $50 for periodicals and $50 for transportation. The library board asked for a total appropriation of $2,987 for the year and will receive $1,887.

The fact that the book and periodical supply of the library has been entirely eliminated will make it difficult for the library board to carry out its work but it is expected that some solution will be found for the handicap. The board is receiving $200 from the provincial government for new books this year and an appeal will likely be made to the public for further funds. A meeting of the board has not been held since the cut became known so no definite action has yet been decided on.

Itemized Estimate

The following were the estimates of the library board itemized:

Salary of Librarian	$1,200
Janitor	120.00
Books	1,000.00
Periodicals	50.00
Furniture and Supplies	50.00
Repairs to building	100.00
Transportation	50.00
Rebinding Books	100.00
Telephone	40.00
Light	50.00
Water	12.00
Insurance	15.00
Coal	150.00
Extras	50.00

As stated the book, periodical and transportation items were cut out by the council.

FOREST WEALTH THIS PROVINCE

Sweden With Half Area Produces More Than Whole of British Columbia

FIRES DESTRUCTIVE

Department Will Prosecute all Who Disobey Regulations Says District Forester

Sweden is just half the size of British Columbia and 8 per cent of it is inland waterways, 11 per cent agricultural, and 28 per cent unproductive while the remaining 51 per cent is productive forest land. P. S. Bonney told the Rotary Club yesterday. Being a progressive nation, the people believe in maintaining the forest capital and from it they cut each year four times as much as is cut in this province. They cut forty billion feet a year.

"Sweden has a population of six millions and the forests are of importance and a matter of concern to every citizen. In that country they have no fires of consequence. They export two billion feet of lumber each year worth about ninety million dollars or of the same value as the whole British Columbia cut. They practice an intensive system of forest management and prevent waste. Stumps are left only three inches high.

"In this country there are two great leaks. There is the wastage in the woods and forest fires. All who have visited lumbering operations must have observed the wood products left on the ground. Often the local operator is blamed for this waste, but it is not his fault. Anything from five to forty cords to the acre is wasted. Economic laws prevent this being utilized. It cannot be taken out at a profit."

Loss by Fire

In regard to forest fires Mr. Bonney told of the large percentage destroyed. The government spent nearly half a million dollars on fire prevention yet, owing to careless campers and careless land clearing, the loss was very heavy. In the interior of this district there was lost last year more ties than would be cut this year. The difficulty the forest department found was the appalling paralyzing apathy of the people. Until there was a change in the viewpoint of the general public the department would be helpless in spite of all they did. Complaints came to him of men being burned out of house and home owing to the carelessness of their neighbors.

This year, Mr. Bonney said, they were going to prosecute to the full limit any man who took a chance in the burning of his slash. There was a permit system and any burning without a permit would be punished. He urged the stimulation of interest in the prevention of the destruction of the wealth of the province by forest fires.

Mr. Bonney told of the vast area of forest land in this province and gave facts and figures in regard to the quantities and values. He emphasized the importance of the timber industry and its influence on all other industries. He said that from 20 to 25 per cent of the area of any country must be maintained under forest to maintain prosperity. Forests prevented erosion, preserved the water supply and made for equable climatic conditions. Any nation that destroyed its forest resources decayed this being illustrated by Spain and China.

Morocco Example

During the war, Mr. Bonney said, he went to Morocco in connection with his naval duties and on pleasure jaunts and one of the things that struck him was the appalling lack of forest resources. It was impossible to find a decent tree in the country. Northern Africa was once great but she lost her forests. Persia, Mesopotamia and Egypt were all examples of decadence.

At the close Vice-president W. T. Kergin, who presided in the absence of Dr. Grant, thanked the speaker for his interesting address.

GREAT CAREER COLONEL BOYLE

London Papers Tell of Him and of His Work in Rumania

English papers just to hand have interesting articles on Col. Joe Boyle who died recently and who is one of the heroes of Mme. Pantazzi's book, "Rumania in Light and Shadow." The London Times says:

We regret to announce that Lieutenant-Col. Joseph Whiteside Boyle, D.S.O., died of heart failure at Hampton Hill, Middlesex, on Saturday. "Joe" Boyle, as he was known to his friends all over the world, had the romantic career which befitted a man of his independent and chivalrous character. The full story of his life and adventures would make one of the most entertaining books ever written. But it is never likely to be written, for Colonel Boyle, though full to the brim of tales of other men, both real and fictitious, was remarkably shy of talking about himself. His latest exploit was about six months ago, when he went to Constantinople and made a dash in a destroyer to Batum, where he rescued some Englishmen who had been interned by the Bolsheviks. Since then his health had failed rapidly.

Met Frank Slavin

Boyle belonged to the family of which Lord Cork is head, but he himself came from Woodstock, Ontario. In 1888 he was engaged in "placer" mining on a large scale in the Klondike. Ultimately he became owner of the Boyle Concession and a leader in hydraulic mining. His name was a household word there, connoting a man of iron build, square-shouldered, blue-eyed, level-browed, with an indomitable will and somewhat turbulent spirit. He did not altogether escape collision with the authorities, but rarely came off second best. To him belonged great physical power, admirably trained fists, good nature, and moderation in all circumstances. Insult, however, he never brooked. To his fists Frank Slavin, the boxer, could hear the best tribute. Slavin owed a great deal of his prowess to Boyle's training and command of all the rules and practices of the prize-ring. In those rough days Boyle proved himself a giant in self-defence, but aggression was not laid to his charge. He was always kind to the weak, always chivalrous.

At the outbreak of the war

Boyle was at Dawson City, nearly 1,000 miles from tide-water, and 10,000 from England. In an incredibly short time he got together the Yukon Machine-gun Corps, which he intended to bring overseas at his own expense. He served with distinction on the Western and other fronts.

In Rumania

Later he was appointed a member of the British Transport Mission to Russia, his section of the reorganization being the Moscow region. One of his exploits was to bring back the Rumanian national treasure from Moscow, where it had been sent for safety, of their necks two wretches who were heating one of "his" prisoners and drive the engine himself. When Rumania was overwhelmed unquestionably saved their lives. In 1917 he made a flight from and finally, by all the force of his Odessa to Jassy, and remained diplomacy, brought them back to with the King and Queen Jassy. The day after their arrival throughout the German occupation the Queen, with her own hand, was at one time on hand, decorated him with the Star General Denikin's staff. After the Armistice he went on a mission to Yalta to bring away the Empress Marie, but she refused said, "They just had to live—the colonel had sworn to bring them back alive, and they dared not

MENTIONED IN BOOK

Colonel Boyle is a prominent figure in Mme. Pantazzi's book, "Rumania in Light and Shadow," published in 1921. In February, 1918, the Germans were advancing on Odessa, and, as Colonel Boyle remarked, they did not like his uniform. He wanted to effect an exchange of some seventy Rumanian prisoners (including Mme. Pantazzi's husband), who were hustled on board a ship, in spite of his opposition. Instantly he decided to go with them.

I can see him now (says Mme. Pantazzi) mounting the steep incline that led to that ship of horrors, and seizing by the scruff of his neck two wretches who were heating one of "his" prisoners and drive the engine himself.
