ORIENTAL QUESTION IS DISCUSSED BY MANSON ADDRESS TO LABOR MEN

House of Commons that B.C. was not prepared to be sacrificed on the altar of Imperial relations. Canadians must have regard to their homes even if it was necessary to involve such relations.

Canada had no quarrel with the Orientals as such and their good qualities must be admired. The standard of living of the Oriental however, was not our standard but was much lower though with the change of environment it had and would undoubtedly improve. Objection was to be taken to their conditions of living which prevented white men from competing with them industrially. There was an inclination rising among the whites against some classes of work but if the whites came to despise work there would be a sorry situation indeed. Hard work and sacrifice was the foundation of happiness.

Ethnological Difference

The real objection against the Oriental was the ethnological difference between him and the white race. The bloods would not assimilate and it was not intended that they should be mixed in any rate not by sudden process in our age. The white race should be protected against the deteriorating effect of intermingling with the Orientals. Some labor must be found to supplant Oriental labor. If industry would not be too grasping it would be possible to use white labor and afford the conditions that such labor demanded. To do this, more unselfishness, fair wages and proper living conditions must be provided by industries.

The Oriental situation was an example of a progressive menace. Coming first as a laundryman, the Chinaman had developed until now business and industry was largely controlled by Orientals. They had acquired property and had entered the business and industrial world. For example, 55 per cent of the Ashcroft potato crop was now produced by Orientals. Since the Chinese had come in there, the quality of the Ashcroft potatoes had gone down until there were hardly any now that were not diseased. Travelling under the reputation of an old established product, the Orientals, were reaping the benefit of that reputation and were sometimes unwittingly patronized by all classes. Knowing the facts, the speaker advised that product of this district which knew no Orientals be always given the advantage, especially in view of the fact that the quality was so much superior.

Birthrate

Though immigration of Orientals had decreased slightly when comparing the years 1910 and 1920, Mr. Manson declared that the birth rate of Orientals had increased by leaps and bounds in an astounding degree. On account of this natural increase, the menace was in no means lessened because of a slight decrease in immigration. Orientals should not only be excluded from Canada but something should be done to make them leave the country. Here was the only solution of the problem.

A few years ago, labor had stood alone in the fight against the Orientals but as they had touched the profits of other elements so did those other elements join in the fight. Agriculturalists, who at first had not said a word; had joined in the struggle against the menace and then had come the merchants. It seemed that had been the only way to enlist their support. In any case, the extension of the activities of the Orientals in late years had enlisted the whole population in the fight to cope with the menace.

Preaching and Practising

It was no good to preach one thing and practise another. The Oriental must absolutely be not patronized. It had been proven that their employment was not an economic necessity. If one plant could get along without employing Orientals there was no reason why the one next door should not. It should be made the most careful business of everyone not to patronize the Orientals. Thus they could be driven out. It was deplorable that there should be the spectacle of returned soldiers unemployed with Orientals working. If there was any unemployment it should be among the Orientals.

The provincial government was prepared to fight the question to the utmost. In the past there had been a lot of political hypocrisy with regard to the question but at the last session, for once in the history of B.C., the whole House had been unanimous in a measure against the Orientals and he believed that every member had been sincere. It was too big a question to be kicked around like a political football. Unless the question was dealt with now, the Orientals would penetrate further into Canada. The mountains would be no barrier and the prairies would soon know them and from thence onwards East. The fight would be lost unless the rest of Canada came to the assistance of B.C. British Columbians must unite to press on Ottawa the seriousness of the situation.

Mr. Manson declared that the Japanese should not be naturalized. It had been stated that they never lost their original nationality.

Before Privy Council

Reference was made to the win of the provincial government before the privy council in the matter of Chinese on crown timber licenses. The question of eliminating the Japs here would come up next. If the case were won it would be a great victory for the province though not by any means a complete one.

Ottawa had already passed legislation against Chinese and the Chinese consuls had protested. That was a good sign and it was desirable that legislation should be passed to keep them kicking. All that B.C. asked of Ottawa was something reasonable and practical that would do something to solve the question.

In closing his address, Mr. Manson stated that the Department of Labor over which he presided was always prepared to give deputations of labor a fair hearing and justice. If they had something reasonable to offer in a reasonable way the department would always be ready to accept their suggestions for corrections. He felt that the provincial department of labor was carrying on in a quiet but efficient manner, doing a good work in providing fair treatment, fair wages and satisfactory conditions for labor. Though it was not complete they had made a fair measure of success which was something to be proud of.

Address Appreciated

President Macdonald expressed appreciation to Mr. Manson for his address. The council undoubtedly realized the seriousness of the situation now more than they did before. Attorney General Manson was dealing with the Oriental situation in a serious manner and was entitled to the support of the working class of the province in his efforts. It was apparent that he had endeavored to do more than any other attorney general had ever done towards a solution of the question. It was only fair that approval should be shown of his efforts.

J. J. Gillis, in moving a vote of thanks to Mr. Manson, declared that if he pursued along the present line, kept the facts before him and did his best he would be entitled to all support regardless of political matters.

McKay Concurs

T. Ross Mackay, in seconding the vote of thanks, said it was not always his privilege to concur with the acts and statements of Mr. Manson and his government but he had great pleasure in doing so on this occasion. All political differences should be forgotten in fighting the Oriental menace.

George Casey asked a question regarding the employment of men on the University site at Vancouver last winter at what he alleged was a starvation rate of pay. Mr. Manson stated that Mr. Casey had been misinformed. It was true that 35c an hour had been paid but it was for relief work and it had been found impracticable to pay a higher rate without drawing in men who left other jobs for the relief. Six days a week work had been given. It was true that nothing but a bare living could be obtained out of the rate given but on the whole it had been a satisfied camp and there had been only three or four kickers. The city of Vancouver, which had protested, had given two days a week relief work at the same time paying 40c an hour. The government had taken care of from 600 to 800 men and had spent $100,000.

This newspaper, properly used, will guide you to the mountain top. Read it and your vision is enlarged. You get a bird's-eye view of world events. You glimpse the doings of the day.

Fail to use it, and your view is limited—you remain in ignorance not only of events at home and abroad, but of much that concerns you even more vitally—news of the very things that have to do with your personal, everyday life.

Fred Stork

Fred Stork, in giving his account of the parliamentary session, told of the diverse duties that fell upon the private member. He had been appointed to several committees and had been at Ottawa the entire five month session with the exception of the last two weeks when he had come home to be here when Sir Henry Thornton paid his visit. After what had transpired, he had been delighted that he had done so.

Mr. Stork referred to the difficulties attending a government that had not control in the House. With such a situation it was impossible to bring about all the legislation that might be desired. Many revisions were necessary to get anything through at all. Criticisms that the government had not lived up to its pre-election promises were unfair since it had been impossible to do so. The session had been drab and dreary and devoid of anything outstanding or spectacular. Business that had taken five months, he felt, might well have been disposed of in two if the disposition had been business like.

Bank Act Vital

General opinion would be that the Bank Act had been the most vital thing dealt with at the session. It had been a perfunctory measure with no romance, drama or upheaval of opinion. The importance attached to it, however, had been because it received such national advertising and had been used as a vehicle for a great deal of personal advertising.

The Farmers had used the Bank Act as a means for self-aggrandizement. They had insisted on a rural credits clause being placed in it and had wasted much time in committee never missing the opportunity to obtain wide advertising about the gallant fight they were putting up. They seemed to be more satisfied with having a grievance than settling it. They had drummed up the failure of the Merchants' Bank when after all it had been a failure caused simply by the criminal acts of men in control—something which no Bank Act could ever regulate.

Hon. Mr. Copp, secretary of state, had sought reforms in the Naturalization Act and would have had naturalizations in future administered through his own office but this had been faced with such opposition, on the grounds that it gave the minister too much power, that it had to be withdrawn.

Iniquitous Amendment

Hon. Mr. Stewart, minister of the interior, would have had Oriental immigration controlled by having a representative of the government at Hong Kong and allowing in only large business men with means, thus limiting immigration to a dozen or so a year. This, Mr. Stork, thought was the most up-to-date measure that could have been conceived but it had been nipped by a unquitos amendment in the Senate which provided that any evaders might be allowed to remain in Canada if they paid the legal fee of entry.
