The Good-will Of Christmas.

One of the most astonishing features of Christmas is the way in which for a brief season the spirit of good-will conquers | Will Rogers in the selfish world. But why is this for such a brief season? To . answer this question we must investigate the causes which pro- low." duce such widespread good-will for this limited period.

There is first a moving appeal to our religious imagination. . Bush." The story of the Mother and the Child is so intensely human Fox-News Gazette. that it wins its way into all hearts. What is noblest and best ... within us responds to the message of God's universal love reyealed to us in human form.

There is next the power of religious tradition. What is !. most sacred is handed down from generation to generation in . Christian customs. Men who would chuck the religious dogma . are not willing to chuck the Christmas cheer. The spell of Christmas is felt by all.

There is further the emotional stress of family associations. We remember what our parents did when we were boys obtained a fine list of pictures and girls, and we do not want our children to miss the Christmas joy.

All United With Religious Feeling.

The result of all these causes combined is that the practi- which local fans have long been cal side of Christmas unites with one religious feeling millions waiting to see, Mary Pickford in of people separated by conflicting religious views. HOW TRILBIES BECAME SYNONYM FOR FEET

Those of Madamaisele Andree Lafayette Shown in Tonight's Picture

One does not have to be numbered amongst the oldest inhabitants to recall the way in which! the word trilbies came to be absorbed into American vernacular as a synonym for feet. A novel was written in France by George Du Maurier. Its concise, euphonious title appealed no less to the imagination than the charm f its delightful heroine, strange young creature of the Montmartre, unsophisticated in spite of her surroundings and the demands made upon her as an artists' model, noted chiefly for the beauty and perfection of INCE August, 1914, the world has endured unutterable suffering, and the Armistice of November, 1918, has brought only a nominal peace. International jealousy and fear are consuming the heart of Europe, and, even in Canada, we are deeply anxious, knowing what a menace these conflicting interests are to the whole of humanity. But to nations and to individuals there comes at this season a message across nineteen centuries: "Peace on earth to men of good will"-and to all the same voice says: "Come unto Me and I will give you Rest."
