measure to the co-operation of active members of the association. The same feeling had prevailed among them all as had prevailed among them when, in France, the feeling of "never say die." He had to extend a good deal of praise to the secretary of the association, Alex. MacKenzie, who had done so much to make the building a reality, and he thought the secretary would be satisfied to know that as long as he lived the building would stand as a monument of his endeavors. Great credit was also due to their architect and advisor, Comrade Landry, who saw that they had obtained dollar for dollar in value and that the contractor had lived up to the contract. He also could say that the building would stand as a monument to his skill as an architect and to his honest supervision. He also had to extend words of praise to the contractor, W. W. Watts, who had given all that he knew how in the way of putting material and work into the building.

Building Paid For

Continuing, Mr. Denning said that while the G.W.V.A. had a home second to none in Prince Rupert he would go further and say that the association had sufficient funds to pay for everything that had been done and a little in the bank to boot. They were in a happy position, notwithstanding the industrial depression, of saying that they could meet all their liabilities and still have a little to spare. The G.W.V.A. had had a good deal of kindly assistance from the citizens who had given advice whenever needed and who had also helped them when they had been in difficulties. The piece of ground, on which the building stood, had been given by the citizens as a tribute to the men who went overseas, so that they could build a home and make it a social stamping ground. The association had enhanced the value of the ground and had shown the citizens that they were in dead earnest in building a home worthy of the city and worthy of British Columbia. Mr. Denning said that sometimes they heard very hard knocks against the association but that the proof of the pudding was in the eating. He did not know of any institution in the city that had spent $12,000 on a building and shown their practical faith in the city as the G.W.V.A. had done.

Benefits Given Out

Continuing, Mr. Denning said that in the course of the year the association had given out from $1,000 to $1,500 towards helping the returned man on his way. Many a returned man had said on a Christmas morning as he saw the well filled stocking of his youngster, "God Bless the G.W.V.A." The association had fought the way of the returned man in getting the government to live up to its pledges. If it had not been for the unity of the returned men in backing up their president and executive, they would not have attained the results they had today.

"When Hazel cut her foot, poison got into the broken skin causing a bad sore," writes Mrs. D. S. Green, of Kingston, Ont. "For some time the limb remained terribly painful and swollen."

"Then I left off ordinary salves and used herbal Zam-Buk. This soothed, cleansed and healed the sore so well, that in a few days Hazel was able to wear her shoe and again attend school. This experience taught me the wisdom of keeping Zam-Buk always handy."

Mr. Denning said there was such a thing as national pride, provincial pride, civic pride, and there was pride in the institution they belonged to. The pride and the faith that they threw into their institution was reflected exactly in the government that was making the laws of the country. He thought sometimes that they were losing sight of the pledges and ideals they had during the high fever of war time when people had said there was nothing too good they could do for the returned man, and that there was nothing too good they could give to the orphan children and to his dependents. Sometimes he thought the people were getting away from these ideals when they got mixed up with business that demanded dollar for dollar. The cripple had left his one hundred per cent efficiency in France. He would say G.W.V.A. The association had fought the way of the returned man in getting the government to member that he had left his one hundred per cent efficiency in France in fighting for the rights of the empire.

The president then called for the observation of a one minute silence as a token of remembrance and esteem to departed comrades. Upon the conclusion of the one minute silence he then declared the building open and said that it would stand for all time as a memorial of the esteem and veneration which they felt for their absent brothers.

Mayor Newton's Address

Mayor Newton in his address said that it gave him great pleasure to be present to participate in the opening of such a splendid building which reflected the greatest credit upon those who had been engaged in bringing it to such a successful conclusion. He hoped that the new building would prove a rendezvous which would not only add to the strength of membership but would bring the comradeship still closer than when the members of the G.W.V.A. mixed in foreign fields, and that they would be made all the more firm in their convictions as proved by them in the past. It reflected great credit upon the association to be able to build such a magnificent edifice and to be able to start out with a clean sheet. The G.W.V.A. had to be proud to be in such a position to make so proud a boast. Mr. Newton said that he was reminded of the fact that when most of those present went into foreign fields to tackle, what seemed to be a very precarious struggle, that they had done their part nobly by staying with it through thick and thin but nevertheless they had had the grit to stay in the struggle until the job was finished. Having accomplished such a purpose as that he was inclined to think that Dr. Grant and others of them would realize more firmly than ever the determination which they had displayed in being able to carry such an undertaking as the erection of the new and substantial building to such a successful conclusion. In speaking of the criticism Mr. Newton said that every institution was liable to criticism of some sort but that if it was sifted down to the fine point the criticism usually came from quarters which they could well afford to ignore. If the association could go along in so good a work knowing that they were raising themselves on a safe, assured and well found construction they could easily afford to pass up any criticism, and that they would find that the work they were carrying on would find recognition by the right thinking people of the community. In closing the Mayor wished every member of the organization prosperity in the future and a full reward for all the many efforts and worthy deeds they had tried to do in the past.

Major Macgregor, V.C.

In making a short address Major Macgregor, V.C., said that it was the first time he had seen the institute building and hoped it would be a building that would be a credit to Prince Rupert and a place for ex-service men to get together and show the esprit de corps which they had shown together in France. He was heart and soul in the movement of the G.W.V.A. but owing to his calling in life he had found it impossible to take an active part in its splendid work. He hoped that the new home would be made the home of many returned men and that it would always be a credit, not only to those present, but to the men who used to be their comrades. While he thought it was a great thing for a man to pay respect and honor to the men who had fallen in the Great War they must not lose sight of the fact that there was honor and respect due to those brave men who had fought for liberty and right in previous wars. He thought that it was one of the finest examples of good citizenship that any man could exhibit when he went forth to fight for his country.

Dr. Grant's Speech

Dr. Grant in opening his address said that when he looked into the determined faces before him he could well believe that towards the end of the war the Germans refused to face the Canadian army. He congratulated the Great War Veterans' Association very sincerely on the magnificent headquarters which had been created for a lot of good fellows who were seeking to help themselves and to help strength for our own welfare and each other. In speaking of the national conditions of the world, he thought that we had got to fight for our rights in Those who had come here to develop should get something for their pioneering work. We had to be helped to some extent in this vast territory in making it our own.

Other speakers included E. C. Gibbons, president of the Board of Trade and Magistrate McClymont.

Musical selections were rendered during the evening by the G.W.V.A. band under bandmaster Beal. The concert and refreshments were excellently handled by B. Warrior and H. Waldorf, with the assistance of Sgt. Jepson, A. Connor and N. Short. Those contributing to the musical program included Bob James, Cpl. Bowler, Frank Morris, Eddie Craggs and Wright Davis. Sid Thompson and Frank Stevens played the piano accompaniments.

The Last Post was sounded at midnight by Trumpeter Rance, and the playing of O Canada and God Save the King, by the band brought a memorable occasion to a successful close.
