Under Coach Johnny Morrison, the Japanese Students team consists of R. Obata, K. Nakamoto, T. Nakamoto, H. Suehiro and Y. Kishimoto.

SPEECH IN INSPIRING

Righteousness, therefore, seemed the only ideal worthy of the acceptance of a young and great nation such as Canada. The speaker urged the importance of this ideal of righteousness in the individual, in the community and in the nation. The nation that adopted righteousness one to the other as its ideal and its duty would exalt itself and become great among the nations of the world.

Luncheon Guests

At the conclusion of his address, a vote of thanks was extended Dr. Westgate on behalf of the club by William Cruickshank, the president. In addition to Dr. Westgate, other guests included Rt. Rev. G. A. Rix, Bishop of Cariboo, F. A. MacCallum and Dr. W. T. Kersin.

A telegram conveying Christmas greetings was received from the Vancouver Gyro Club and was ordered replied to in similar tone. The club also decided to send a cable of Yuletide greetings to Dr. J. H. Carson, one of the members who is at present in Vienna taking up medical post-graduate work.

Wonderful Change of Sentiment In Italy Following Revolution And Press is Brought up to Date

(By Victor Basso-Bert—This is the last of a series of seven articles. So great has been the interest in them that Mr. Basso-Bert has been asked to write two more, one comparing Fascism with Socialism and the other with Bolshevism.)

Fascism has realized internal peace through order and discipline in work. It has permeated all classes with a spirit of equity and justice, thus establishing the well-balanced and fruitful collaboration of all citizens in the corporative state. Fascism has accomplished the great work of the creation of a new and most modern form of economic life—a state of affairs that has rejuvenated and transformed the mental attitude of forty-five millions of people. A peaceful social atmosphere and an absolute faith in the future, together with a sense of law and order, prevail among the masses.

The Italian people recognize and appreciate the fact that the strong hand of Il Duce was the hand of a savior. To demonstrate this let us cite a few facts. Turin, the Detroit of Italy, was between 1918 and 1922 ruled by the extreme Reds. For the celebration of the tenth anniversary of the revolution Mussolini started on a tour covering the whole northern part of Italy, beginning at Turin on October 24. The reception given him there was beyond description. Four to five hundred thousand people gathered in the Piazza Castello to hear him. He further spoke in the F. I. A. T. (motor factory) to 35,000 workers urging them to join the fascist political organization in recognition of the work that the regime had done for the toilers, an outstanding and unique treatment of social justice. The response was such that next March 20,000 of the workers will go to Rome to pay homage to Il Duce.

From Turin he moved to inaugurate the opening of the new autostrade (auto road) connecting Turin with Milan, 247 kilometres of cement highway with no crossings, all passages being above or under. These autostrades are reserved for motor cars only. A small fee is paid to enter them and one can travel practically all through Northern Italy on them, taking in Turin, Milan, the Italian Lakes, Brescia and Venice. A branch connecting Genoa, Turin and Venice is under construction.

At Milan Mussolini spoke in Piazza del Duomo to between six and seven hundred thousand people with a reception similar to that of Turin. Then at Brescia, Monza, Pavia and other places—a real triumph wherever he went.

Revolution of the Press

The law regulating the public press was passed by Parliament in 1925. With the inception of the new legislation, journalism ceased to be a private fact and became a national fact. It passed from a regime of irresponsibility to one of responsibility. The law has imposed well-determined moral and cultural requisites for the exercise of the journalistic profession. It has specified the responsibilities of editors and reporters. It has made it possible to identify the sources of life of the newspapers and has given to readers a guarantee of the ability and dignity of the organs and persons aspiring to become spokesmen of public opinion and educators of the people.

A well known American writer, McClure, in 1927 wrote: "Journalism in Italy is now a great instrument for the development of culture and the welfare and prosperity of the nation. It is interesting itself in national problems, explaining the work that the nation is accomplishing and to be accomplished. More than that of any other country, the journalism of Italy is an instrument of civilization."

When the transformation of Italian journalism has been definitely accomplished it will be the most complete journalistic revolution ever brought about in any land because Italy will be the first nation to demonstrate with facts that the public press must not be the sewer of the nation but the most important means for the education of the people.

Mussolini, in speaking to journalists of all lands assembled in Rome, stated: "In some lands newspapers are serving groups of plutocrats or parties or individuals; in others the press is reduced to the low function of buying and selling excitable news. In still other countries the press is grouped in the hands of a few individuals who consider the newspapers to be an industry like iron or leather."

"Italian journalism is the freest in the world. It is free because it is serving only one cause and one regime, that is the supreme interest of the nation. It is free because, within the laws of the regime, it can exercise and is exercising the function of control, of critic, of propagation. It is free because, as we want that journalism be a mission, well then, any mission must be accomplished by a high sense of responsibility."

The Italian journalistic contract was subjected to ample discussion at the international labor bureau at Geneva and was unanimously considered to be the most complete journalistic contract existing. Stephen Valot, editor of L'Ouvre, Paris, and president of the international federation of journalists declared: "In this contract the Italian journalists are the vanguard of the journalistic profession."

CHRISTMAS OBSERVED

Successful Christmas Tree, Concert and Dance at Usk

USK, Dec. 21.—The Usk School concert was held on Saturday last in the Usk Community Hall in conjunction with the annual Christmas tree and dance.

The concert was prefaced by a short explanatory speech by P. Skinner, secretary of the school board, concerning the traditional Christmas practices of the community and the financial status of the funds to date.

Miss Kathleen Durham presented her usual successful concert, the children performing their parts with great spirit. The program was composed of the usual recitations, songs, plays and drills at the close of which Santa Claus paid a visit.

Upon Father Christmas' hasty exit with rousing booms from the local orchestra, the hall was quickly cleared for the dance which continued with the customary happy spirit of the times. The dance was a great success despite the occurrence of several persistent aquatic showers from overhead.

Much credit is due to the children, Miss Durham and master of ceremonies, Bert Wilson, for the very successful affair.
