Alec Munro Honored

Special Bowling Meet at C.N.R.
Evening Last Night

The Canadian National Recreational Association lawn bowling tournament took on a renewed aspect last evening when bowlers turned out in full force to honor and farewell Alec Munro, an old member of the green and now retiring as chief engineer of the steamer Prince Rupert after long service on this coast.

Mr. Munro has always shown an interest in the bowling game during his short periodical visits to this port. His jovial personality will be greatly missed.

During the evening three links took part in the contest for a trophy which has been played between the ship and the shore members for the past few years. Those playing for the ship were by a score of 55 to 40.

After the games William Reid, president of the club, presented Munro with the cup and thanked him for the best of luck in his years to come. Alec, in receiving the cup, thanked the members for the good times he had had on the green and for the sportsmanship shown at the games. He also thanked the fine turnout for the game and the assistance in helping him to win the trophy.

Back the cup to the green. In this trophy he played in memory of his shipmate, Andy, who helped him to develop in some of the early years of the green.

Now and D. A. MacPhee to make a few words in appreciation of the guest of honor and to take pictures of the ceremony.

At the commencement of the games Sgt. L. A. N. Potter took pictures of the ceremony.

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Henry J. Kaiser testified yesterday that Admiral William D. Leahy, White House chief of staff, flashed the go-ahead sign on a multi-million dollar wartime contract for 200-ton cargo planes, which never got into the air, to thwart the submarine menace. Kaiser claimed that the baby flat-tops practically won the war.

HICKEY BEACHED ON DIGBY ISLAND

Fish Packer Will Be Brought To Dry Dock Later

Suspended on cables between two scows, the damaged Co-op fish packer Hickey was lying off the Digby Island marine station this morning as the salvage crew which brought her from Hammer Rocks waited for a high tide in order to beach her.

The Hickey's bottom was holed when she struck a reef near Triple Island last Saturday morning and she was later sunk to prevent her from breaking up in the pounding surf of Chatham Sound.

Wednesday, the 110-foot packer was raised by an Armour Salvage Co. crew from the 13 fathoms of water in which she had settled, and towed by the tug Kaizen to the entrance of the harbor. She was to be beached at Digby Island and temporary patches put on her damaged hull then towed to the dry dock for repairs.

The Hickey was loaded with fish camp supplies and ice when she struck the Hammer reef.

KENYA SKIPPER ACTIVE THROUGH TWO CONFLICTS

Captain Lennox Boswell, D.S.O., R.N., captain of H.M.S. Kenya which visits here, was born in Essex on May 18, 1898, and joined the R. N. College, Osborne, in May 1911.

He joined his first ship, H.M.S. Irresistible in July 1914 a few days before the Kaiser's war started and saw service in her in the Channel and North Sea and then at the Dardanelles, where he landed several times to blow up the guns of the entrance forts. His ship was sunk by a mine during the March 18 attack on the Narrows.

On April 25, the day the army landed, he was in charge of a picket boat at Seddul-Bahr and subsequently took part in mine sweeping and mine laying off Smyrna.

In August 1915 he joined H.M.S. Queen Elizabeth, which became Admiral David Beatty's flagship in 1917, and witnessed the surrender of the German High Sea Fleet in November, 1918.

At that time five U.S. battleships formed the 6th Battle Squadron under Admiral Hugh Rodman, U.S.N., who was a connection of Captain Boswell's mother, a Rotch, with cousins in New England.

Between the wars, Captain Boswell served on the China Station 1920-22, West Indies and America Station 1925-26, Mediterranean 1929-30 and in between in various ships of the Home Fleet, including the aircraft carrier Furious, the 8th cruiser Dorsetshire, and in the fleet flagship Nelson.

While Fleet Gunnery Officer in the latter, he commanded the Naval Battalion from the Home Fleet at the Coronation of the present King and Queen.

He attended the R.N. Staff College in 1935 and the R.A.F. Staff College in 1938. In 1939 he took command of a new A.A. Sloop H.M.S. Pelican and on the outbreak of Hitler's war, was senior Officer Escort of the first convoy of the war, from the Thames to the North.

EARNED D.S.O. FOR KEEPING SHIPS RUNNING

These East Coast convoys felt the brunt of the first air attacks, "E"-boat attacks and the early magnetic and acoustic mine campaigns. Captain Boswell earned his D.S.O. for keeping the convoys running and thus ensuring London's coal supply, which was distinctly precarious at that time.

In April, 1940 he took part in the Norwegian campaign but the ship's stern was blown off by dive bombers near Andalsnes and he was lucky to get her back to the Shetlands in tow of H.M.S. Fleetwood.

While a new stern was being built, Captain Boswell took part in the evacuation of the British and French Armies from Dunkirk, followed by various anti-invasion activities.

H.M.S. Pelican was repaired in October and resumed duties on the East Coast for the winter 40-41. In March '41 she was mined twice in one day off the Thames but was towed back to Sheerness and just kept afloat.

Captain Boswell then joined the Ordnance Board and was responsible for the early development and trials of the "Hedgehog," an anti S/M weapon that proved of great value in the war. In July 1941 he became Deputy Director of the Gunnery Division of the Admiralty and was responsible for the development of Radar for gunnery purposes and of anti-aircraft devices in general.

In 1943 he declined the command of a cruiser and asked to be sent to an aircraft carrier, and in March took command of H.M.S. Dasher, (one of the early escort carriers or "Baby Flat Toppers").

She was destined to join the Battle of the Atlantic but sank

Security Council Session at Lake Success Postponed

LAKE SUCCESS, N. Y.—Herschel V. Johnson, deputy United States delegate on the United Nations Security Council, hurried to Washington yesterday for a series of conferences with the Secretary of State, General Marshall and other State Department officials.

Before leaving, Johnson obtained the postponement of the Security Council session scheduled for the afternoon.

Possibility that United States might announce a drastic move to counter Russia's veto of the American proposal for a United Nations border watch over the Balkans was advanced by informed sources here. These sources said that Herschel V. Johnson, deputy delegate for the United States, might disclose the next American step in the serious east-west struggle over the Balkans in the veto-throttled security council this afternoon or tonight.
