On December 9, 1941, we arrived at Luzon, where we commenced an attack on Corregidor. As night fell we carried on with our bombardment of the island. All through the night we kept it up, the shore guns answering ours. At last, as the fateful our attack slightly. At about can planes were seen to be head- | Scharff. ing towards up. At 1045 they had reached us and were dropping small bembs and torpedoes among us. One small ship was sunk and our forward gun tur-11.15. The planes drew off but, the following: after a short period, more planes reached and attacked us. We had kept up a barrage most of the time, our ship succeeding in hringing down two enemy planes. At-12:00 a.m. we stopped steaming around the island and gave all our attention to fighting the American planes. At 12:30 we decided to withdraw, having had Tree." The cast consists of the many casualties. Only a few planes were attacking us at the moment.

We had hardly started to steam away when, looking upwards, I saw an American plane flying toward us. We opened fire on it but it continued on towards us. That plane must have had a charmed life for it kins. came on and on and we wondered what had happened to the rilot. Not for a minute did we think the pilot was heading for us on purpose but he was, as I late" found out. Now the plane was diving towards us. Quickly it descended to the level of the ship. Then with a terrible crash it struck the side of the ship. The force of the plane had driven it clean through the side. Cheer Leading Now the bombs began to explode. The hole became larger until it reached the water-line. Immediately the ship took on a list which quickly became more pro- vet. nounced until at last the ship began her long slow dive into the sea. I shall never forget that Library moment, men were screaming age. I saw the ship sink into the depth of the rolling sea. I was picked un later by an American warship.

I write this to pay tribute as even I, an enemy, must to the pilot of that small plane, Captain P. Kelly, who met his deale very bravely. -Class 10B. Age 14.
