Let's Speak Bluntly

MHATEVER ELSE may be said about the Soviet VV Union at least its manners are distinctive, says

Montreal Star. What is to be made of a government which sends its foreign minister abroad to discuss a plan for European self-help, aided by American capital, and at the same times launches a violent propaganda attack upon the country sponsoring the plan?

Up to now there has been a tendency to excuse this kind of performance. We feel we must "get along with the Russians," and that it is important to maintain co-operation. But it is about time that the Russians gave some heed to getting along with

We have been saying that we must try and understand the Russians, whose ways are different from our ways. How about the Russians trying to understand us for a change? We have said that - part of the trouble is that the Russians are suspicious of us, and we must allay their fears. It is perhaps time we said out loud that we are highly suspicious of the Russians, who might make an effort to prove to us that our suspicions are wrong.

General Marshall was right to strike out as he did. He declared that the Soviet propaganda was "a malicious distortion of the truth." This plain speaking, distant though it may be from the normal amenities of diplomatic procedure, was amply justified. In dealing with a boor, it is necessary to be just as blunt as that.
