WHAT IS HAPPENING to Prince Rupert five months after the Celanese Corporation of America announced it would build a pulp mill here, a plant approximately the size of the Puget Sound Pulp & Timber company plant near Ketchikan?

Asked the question W. L. Baker, roving editor of the Ketchikan Chronicle, asked of several citizens attending the convention of B.C.-Alaska Boards of Trade and Chambers of Commerce. And here is the answer:

Emergency wartime housing for shipyard workers and civil employees of the army were to be torn down for shipyard workers and other emergency housing. What is left will be retained for celanese workers, and what is left will be retained for celanese workers. They are bigger and better than the new owner's plan. (Incidentally, this Juneau company is building a pulp mill and plywood plant for the Juneau area.)

There is much talk about a new hotel. The town has no hotel, the nearest approach being the Prince Rupert Hotel and brick concrete affair that was built years ago. It has an elevator but few baths or showers, no dining room, and the personnel are, however, all one could ask. But with thousands of American tourists coming over the new highway, the hotels are all jammed and more hotels are being built. The new commercial business to be built at the mill is operating. Some local people are investing in the new hotel and two men are figuring out the details.

New business houses are under construction or are a few weeks. They are tending to locate on the new Second Avenue running south from the new Civic Centre and the Courthouse, a wide avenue with lots of room. The block west of the main business district but already built, the Moose Lodge, the Rupert Club, and many other buildings located on it.

The city is talking of a new grade school building to replace the aged looking one. It is busy tearing up streets and repaving, but this work is rather the result of damage done to the city by the U.S. army and the Canadian government during the war. The damage done to the city by the U.S. army and the Canadian government during the war. The damage done to the city by the U.S. army and the Canadian government during the war.

At the plant itself we saw at Port Edward, eight miles west of Prince Rupert. Here the U.S. army had chiseled a road of a cliff to build ammunition loading facilities, a wharf, two lesser docks, a small warehouse and a garage. The latter won't go with the mill site but the larger warehouse and the chiseled-in site do. However, the road is beginning on more blasting into the rock. The road at Port Edward also is being regraded.

At a meeting we heard a meeting had been held between officials and operators of small lumber mills. The meeting was to buy lumber for the new mill but Terrace operators, flushed by high profits of the war and post-war boom, wouldn't meet the price the company offered so the mill will be purchased at New Westminster, near Vancouver. The citizens felt this gave their town a bad name. Since much of the timber to be converted into celanese in the Terrace area, 95 miles east of Prince Rupert, several hundred men will be employed in the woods, and the town will stabilize its employment.

The mill, in fact, will spread money well along the rail line. It will buy coal from Telkwa, some 250 miles east of Terrace, at the rate of 100 to 200 tons per day, doubling Terrace's population in a hurry when it begins to operate. The mill will have to hire more men shortly to begin expansion. It will have to buy pit props, which will be produced in the Terrace area. Likewise, the railroad will have to modernize, which means it will buy ties in this region.

Asked the merchants how the coming of the mill had affected business. They said it already is noticeable, although the work has been done as yet. However, engineers keep coming and going, the forest department has men out with chainsaws checking timber, and other companies that want to compete in the region are rushing in before Celanese gets all. This has brought the big Powell River company to Terrace, about 60 miles north of Vancouver into the Terrace district to purchase large lots of spruce and hemlock.

Local residents are crowding about the population growth in Terrace. In the last few years, a growth that forced addition of seats in the national parliament for the province. This growth is trying to get a seat in the national senate.

Others See It Through

TIME of unprecedented peacetime economic growth in Britain on the tight little isle are seen coming together even as they did in the grim days of threatening and bloody warfare. Now, they have expressed their grouches and grievances and done with. Political crisis may have been averted but, in their good judgment and their mutual equanimity, it was not allowed to get beyond control. They might not have liked it, but the Minister's austerity program was approved by the House and Lords alike. They sank political opposition and gave the government the Green Light to proceed. Of course, there was nothing else to do. The government have been told what they must do to pull themselves through. Now they will get on and do it. They will sweat and possibly some tears of tribulation ahead but Britons will weather it through. The days at home are that way.

Sergeant Nordling Is Doing Travelling Sergeant Otto Nordling, who spent considerable time here during the latter stages of the war and who, since leaving, saw a good deal of the world, including the Orient, was in Ottawa recently, having completed a course at Camp Borden. Subsequently he left for Seattle.

GREAT BRITAIN IS NOT SO GRIM Mrs. D. McKenzie of Hazelton, who returned recently from six months spent in the north of England and in Scotland, says there appears to be a lot of exaggeration spread concerning economic affairs overseas. Everything essential to maintaining a standard of living is available although there may be scarcity in certain lines of luxury. The best way to aid Britain, just now she said, is to purchase more British made goods.

MORE SOLDIERS IN HOSPITALS OTTAWA— Authorities have disclosed that, although the number of patients being treated in army hospitals has increased about 7 percent in the past few weeks, there has been a marked reduction in the number of soldiers being treated in other than army hospitals. As a result of the transfers, the average daily bed occupancy in army hospitals has jumped from 250 to 300.

Reminiscences By W.I. and Reflections

Gerry McGeer spent a few diverting hours on the Capitol Theatre stage years ago, addressing an audience that crowded the house and overflowed into the street. He was talking politics and campaign support, just then, was needed. Down front sat a couple of hecklers obviously there for that purpose exclusively. But, they couldn't have known their pugnacious Irish-Canadian. Back he came, time and again, like the snap of a whip, and sharp enough to sting. The hecklers were effectively squashed by the quick grinning senator-mayor.

Bringing the outside public to realize you can motor to or from Prince Rupert over a first rate highway demands unlimited patience and persistence. It's always been like that. To really put over anything favorable to this city, although a thousand times true, has always been difficult enough. Getting it through the head of a somebody living elsewhere in Canada would almost seem to require a surgical operation. Once, not so many years ago, an interview appeared in an eastern paper wherein the dear lady vowed she had to walk from the ship over the ice, to reach the city. And even that whopper lingered.

It's getting around to the season when the hardy frontiersmen of the region of Kaien used to take counsel together and ponder details concerning the annual fair. For the yearly exhibition helped a lot in stimulating city and district development. In some ways, the results were astonishing. It was shown that Skeena could, indeed, produce more than fish and rain. The fruits of abundant sunshine and fertile soil proved plenty. These, along with many other attractive displays, all skillfully staged, helped in giving the city the publicity it needed.
